THE proprietors of the Oil-Cloth Factory are building a furnace and erecting a high chimney with which to consume and carry off the odorous fumes of boiling oils.

THE History of Union and Middlesex Counties, that has been in course of preparation for some time, is at last published and will be delivered to subscribers in a few days.

TELL your folks that the Crescent avenue church excursion to Long Branch and Ocean Grove on Tuesday the 29th inst., will be the last opportunity to visit those popular resorts for a one-dollar bill.

IN another column the Board of Education advertise for proposals in writing for the purchase and removal from the premises of the frame school-building on Fourth street, recently damaged by fire.

WE heartily congratulate the editor of the Clinton Democrat upon the surrounding circumstances of his position. We know how pleasant it is ourselves, to run a paper in a town full of pretty girls.

PROF. Lyon having, last week, in these columns, introduced Prof. Lewinsky to the public, the latter steps forward, makes a bow, and addresses the community in a communication published elsewhere.

THE ride by rail to the Highlands next Tuesday, is worth the price of the whole excursion. Through Jersey's most beautiful scenery and past the mammoth hotels and magnificent cottages of Long Branch and Monmouth Beach.

MR. B. Lynch of Sterling and a number of his neighbors indulged in a "lumber frolic" at Long Hill on Saturday last. They carted big loads of lumber to the spot, in generous assistance of a fellow farmer who had suffered by fire.

DURING the services at the Park Avenue Baptist Church on Sunday Aug. 20th, 1882, at 10:30 a. m., the Rev. David Downie of Nellore, will deliver a Missionary Address—subject, the Telagoos—as delivered by him at Ocean Grove, N. J.

THE Fourth Annual Picnic of the A. O. H., which was held at Stelle's Grove on Thursday of last week, was one of the most successful and pleasurable of the season. Everything passed off agreeably, and the managers are to be commended for their efforts and the good results.

THE residence of Mr. Benjamin O. Bowers, at La Grande avenue and Franklin Place, was entered by a burglar during the early hours of Saturday last. The family was awakened by an unusual noise, but the thief escaped with some articles of wearing apparel and a small sum of money.

AT the corner of Front and Somerset streets, on Sunday night last, quite a disturbance arose from an encounter between a special policeman and the corner-loafers. The officer was badly hammered for a few moments by a young member of the gang, who afterwards escaped from the arrest that still awaits him.

IN consequence of the general bad health of Mr. J. E. White, and his need of rest and change of air, he has closed his dry and fancy goods store at the corner of Front and Peace streets, and left Plainfield for a short vacation. We are informed that the store will again be opened to-morrow or Monday next.

IT is now proposed to use wire fences in rural districts for telephonic purposes. It is claimed that distant farm houses could thus be put in communication with each other at very little expense. If this should prove to be true, the advantage to the farming population in a social and business way wherever these fences are used, would be incalculable.

IT was during Tuesday of last week that a popular tenor of the Plainfield Saengerbund and a Servian friend engaged a boat at Bound Brook and embarked on the foaming billows of the raging Raritan. From sea-sickness our vocalist fell over the side into the mighty deep and would have closed his short life then and there had not his companion generously got out and helped him in again.

SATURDAY was the day when all the farmers of South and West Jersey took their families of wives, sons, and daughters in great lumbering, old fashioned carryalls to the seaside for their annual wash. The day is popularly known as "salt water day" and thousands visit the shore. This year the great festival was held at South Amboy, and it is estimated that no less than 60,000 people took part.

IN the town of Meriden, Miss., the price of a first-class license for the sale of liquor has been fixed at $1,500. Here is a hint for the prohibitionists, who are always at loggerheads with the restrictionists. The sum of $1,500 is actual prohibition to nineteen-twentieths of the people who engage in the liquor traffic, yet it is a restrictionist system, pure and simple—and there is no talk of absolute prohibition.

Fashion Notes.

The correct tint for complexions at present is the just-got-home-from-the-sea-shore brown.

Additional Advertising Advantages.

In preparation for an unusually active Winter season of concerts, lectures and other entertainments, we have just added, at some cost, another large bill-board fence to our extensive facilities for such means of advertising. It is located on the North side of Somerset street, in the very centre of North Plainfield, and is one of the best stands ever selected.

Off the Track.

Conductor Sandborn's 10:45 p. m. train from this city, usually runs to Dunellen and there turns around and goes back to New York. On Wednesday night, however, the man at the side-switch turned it too far, and the locomotive ran off and buried itself four feet deep in the soft gravel. As this accident occurred just in the right place to block the track from the Dunellen [illegible] Conductor Sandborn was late Thursday morning, in getting the engine out and on the way to New York.

Coming Home.

Is it not about time for the Greenback party in Plainfield to gather itself together for the Fall campaign?—Central Times.

From private advices to friends in this city, we learn that the party referred to above is on his way home from a short vacation to the sea-shore.

The Excursion of the [illegible] Twos.

An unusually large crowd left Plainfield on Thursday with No. 2 Engine and Hose Co's for Neshaminy Falls. All the blushing and blooming young maiden friends of the members accompanied the excursion and the boys are to be envied for the good time they are having as we go to press.

What Next?

The fumes of naptha and paris-green from the oil-cloth factory damaging our property and threatening the good-health of the city's inhabitants, combined with a liability of being consumed in our beds from fire kindled by incendiaries, seem to be insufficient menace to please the Fates, and we are now favored with snakes in our streets.

Snakes in Our Streets.

Passing along Central avenue near Front street, one day last week, we almost stepped on a large copperhead snake that lay coiled on the sidewalk. We killed the "varmint" on the spot, but wisely held our tongue regarding the matter for fear of its effect on our reputation as a total-abstainer. The Central Times, however, having published the account of a like experience at the corner of New and Second streets, we boldly tell our tale.

In Explanation.

About a month ago, Collector Brown requested that his accounts for the past six months be audited by a Committee from the Common Council—a simple performance that the Finance Committee was appointed to carry out. At the Council meeting of the 7th inst, however, the Committee was empowered, at its own request, to employ an expert to execute the work (?) Consequently, it is essential, out of justice to the Collector, to inform the public, that might misunderstand the circumstances, that the appointment of an expert is both unnecessary and absurd.

For Ocean Grove!

We trust that our readers will bear in mind the fact that the next popular excursion to Ocean Grove will be on the 21st of this month. This will undoubtedly be a large one as it affords our citizens, for the first time, an opportunity to attend the annual Methodist camp meeting at that place, which will be in progress then. The sea bathing during this month is especially fine, and on the day of this excursion will be good nearly all day. The excursion is in charge of an energetic committee, and extra efforts are being put forth to make it a comfortable and enjoyable trip for all who go. Tickets can be secured at Benjamin R. Force's shoe store or at Edsall's.

The Only Excursion

From this city to the far-famed Highlands of the Navesink, will leave Plainfield on Tuesday of next week, when the Sunday School of the Trinity Reformed and First Presbyterian churches will invite their friends to accompany them to that novel and attractive destination. No more available a spot for a day's enjoyment could have been selected, and the opportunity of visiting the wonderful "Highland Lights" should be seized by all. Besides this attraction, both surf and still water bathing can be had, with sailing and fishing in the Shrewsbury River and pleasant rambles through the grand woods that surround the place. The journey will be made entirely by rail and no change of cars is necessary.

Church Membership.

From data regarding the different religious denominations in this state, we glean the following regarding church membership in Plainfield and surrounding towns.

	Methodist	Baptist	Episcopal	Presbyterian	Dutch Reformed
Plainfield	[illegible]	1,094	[illegible]	[illegible]	178
Westfield	148	118	[illegible]	285	—
Dunellen	[illegible]	—	—	106	—
Bound Brook	102	—	42	—	108
Somerville	170	200	[illegible]	—	[illegible]
Elizabeth	[illegible]	[illegible]	1,303	2,000	—

In Orange the ratio of Church membership to the total population is 1 in 24, which is the most remarkable showing in the United States.

Send Him Where He Belongs.

Our citizens during the past two weeks have been entertained (?) with the sight of a most abject and pitiable pauper, who posts himself generally upon the corner of Park avenue and Front street for the purpose of inciting public sympathy. This person is a grey-haired and decrepit colored man, by name Charles Ludlow, which title he has assumed by reason of many years service, during early life, in the family of Gov. Geo. C. Ludlow. Some time ago he was in the employ of the Hon. Eugene S. Doughty of Somerville, who recently placed him in the care of the Overseer of the Poor of Bridgewater Township. Funds having been furnished for the purpose the old man was started from Morristown for the Poor Farm, but with the money given for his traveling expenses he has instead journeyed to this city and settled himself down as noticed above. In consequence, the duty devolves upon the proper authorities of Plainfield (which has enough paupers of its own to support) to send Charles Ludlow back to the tender care of Morris County's Commissioner of Alms.

A Question.

The law says: "The assessor of the several townships, towns, wards, boroughs and cities of this State shall, on the third Tuesday in August of each year, attend the meeting of the committee or council of his township, town, borough or city, and lay before them the duplicate of assessment, to be by them examined, revised and corrected; and it shall be his duty to remain with said council, for the purpose of explaining the said duplicate, and assisting said committee or council in the discharge of the duties required of them by this act." Rev. 1160, §33.

Assessor Hubbard met the Council of this city on Tuesday evening and laid before it his duplicate of assessment. He also remained for the purposes mentioned in that relation, above. Yet although the meeting was (or should have been) arranged to conform with the law, and (as in all townships, cities, &c., throughout the State was accomplished on that date) to examine, revise and correct the duplicate, it was merely referred to the Finance Committee.

Did our Council neglect its duty?

Obituary.

During Tuesday of last week at his father's residence in Westfield, Otis Greenleaf Webb died in the 36th year of his age after a lingering illness. The deceased was well known in this city where he numbers many friends, and his popularity among all whom he met was sincere and unbounded. He was a prominent member of the Plainfield Athletic Club during its existence, and an ardent advocate and supporter of amateur sports. The deceased, with a brother, at one time edited and published the Westfield Tocsin, displaying creditable ability as a writer and journalist. These columns, also have at times been indebted to his pen for skillful sketches of Westfield matters. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon from Grace church and was largely attended. The remains were interred in Fairview Cemetery. The wife and only child of the deceased departed this life but a short time ago, but of his immediate family there remains a father, mother and five brothers to mourn his loss.

Board of Education.

A meeting of the Board of Education was held Monday evening last and much routine business transacted.

Mr. Harper presented a remonstrance against the proposed location of a School House at the junction of LaGrande, Putnam and Franklin avenues, signed by a large number of property owners and occupants in that vicinity, also personal communications from B. O. Bowers, Esq. and Isaac L. Miller, Esq., relative to the same matter, which were read and placed on file, with the understanding, that when all the members of the Board returned home, a public meeting should be called for the purpose of hearing a full expression of sentiment on the part of the remonstrants and other interested citizens.

The Board, after resolving to have Assembly Hall fitted up for the temporary accommodation of classes; to inquire into the expediency of renting the old Post Office for a like purpose; to solicit proposals for the purchase and removal of the wrecked Fourth street building; and to devote an evening of the present week to each architect, Messrs. Teale, Doyle and Smith, for a review of his submitted plans for a new edifice on site of the one recently burned, adjourned.

[illegible] Paid.

If your key in the lock of your post-office box, will not go where it usually went, the fault is your own, 'tis a sign to make known the fact that you owe for the rent.

Personals.

During Friday night of last week, the widow of the late William McNabb died of consumption, after a long illness, at the residence of her mother, Mary B. Lennon. The deceased, who so soon followed her brother to the land of eternal rest, leaves three young orphans.

Mr. Seely Edsall has purchased the junior partner's interest in Plainfield's branch of the establishment of Edsall & Price, and will henceforth conduct the business in his own name and under the able management of Mr. Geo. Van Emburgh, as of old.

Mr. David Robinson, a former and well known resident of North Plainfield, and now a citizen of Arizona, is visiting old friends in this vicinity.

Base Ball.

Last Saturday had been set for a match game between an Elizabeth team and the Crescent nine, but the former failed to appear and the latter indulged in a much needed practice game. Upon the occasion a new pitcher was given a trial that proved most satisfactory, and if a catcher can now be secured to support him the Crescent's strength in the field will be doubled. On Wednesday more practice was had preparatory to an expected return match with the Standard Oil nine at Hoboken on Saturday.

The Potter nine went to Westfield on Saturday to play against the home team of that place. On arriving there it was found that a match with Elizabeth was in progress, and the Potter's returned to offer a game with the Crescent's. The latter, however, wanted to "play all by themselves."

Hard Up.

Writes a correspondent to an exchange: "I should like to subscribe for your inimitable paper, but I haven't got the money at present. In fact, if ocean steamers were selling for a cent a piece, I could not make the first payment on a canoe. If you will let me have it on credit and wait till after I thrash, I should deem it a great favor. There is a man that lived over in the edge of Jones County that owed me $2. He ran away to Kansas last Spring, but we heard that he has been grasshoppered or cycloned, or something, and is coming back to his wife's relations; and if he comes back and pays me, I will send it to you on subscription. But if the crops should fail and Smith should not come back, I will pay you out of my pension money, sure. I have applied for back pension for an in-growing toenail, contracted in the service of the United States, in the line of duty, etc., and I am bound to get it, for every able-bodied man around here, that was in the army, is drawing a pension. I will have the money by October, certain."

Try the Following Plan.

This city which seems to be invested with incendiaries, might do as was done in York, Pa., a few years ago. The plan was as follows:

Several of the citizens finding the evil of incendiary fires growing in their town, secretly organized themselves into a watch, and by enlisting the support and help of the police succeeded in finding out the guilty parties and procuring the evidence which led to their conviction. The matter was quietly arranged, and these citizens kept a watch on the alleys and places where it was probable there might be attempts made to fire. No one knew of the movement nor suspicioned that there were patrols. True, the police were frequently missed off their regular beats, and some complained that they were neglecting their duty, but those in the secret were satisfied, and soon their efforts were rewarded by the apprehension of the guilty parties, and York's incendiary band are now suffering the penalty of their crimes behind the iron bars of the penitentiary.

If the citizens of Plainfield move in the proper manner and with discretion, a like good result might be accomplished.

Young Philanthropists.

In an unoccupied building on Peace street near Fifth there was held a fair during Thursday of last week, that deserved to be and was as successful as any like event that has ever come to our notice. The object was a donation to the "Fresh Air Fund" that is managed by public-spirited citizens of New York city and used to defray the expense of procuring for poor children the enjoyment of excursions to the country. The fair we refer to in particular, was the result of the untiring labors of a number of benevolent little ladies—Bessie Moore, Minnie Wooden, Alice Hawley and Chrissie Yawger assisted by Edith Yawger, Belle Wooden and Margie Weaver. Lots of articles of use and ornament were contributed and easily disposed of, while tempting refreshments also brought satisfactory profits. The net financial result was $44.31 which was forwarded to the Treasurer of the Fund and acknowledged in the New York Tribune of Sunday last. The generous efforts of these young ladies and the spirit of kind thoughtfulness shown for the comforts of the little folks less blessed with life's luxuries, are most commendable and set an example that many of us older ones might follow with credit to ourselves.

Dull.

Storekeepers and shopkeepers naturally complain that trade is somewhat dull.—This state of affairs is brought about by the fact that so many families are on their annual visit to the mountain or seashore, where the hotel and boarding-house keepers are reaping a magnificent harvest. Perhaps more persons are absent from the city at the present time than will be the case at any time during the present season, and while a few are returning, many are departing. Their absence is felt by the newspaper men, grocers, butchers, icemen, milkmen, coal, produce, oil, fish, harness and shoe dealers, physicians, peddlers, paper carriers and others. After awhile, especially if the atmosphere should prove to be as pleasant as it was yesterday, last night and to-day, familiar faces will again be observed on the streets and at church, and business will assume its accustomed vigor. "Going away" has become almost as much of a fashion as living, and while all cannot go, and others for various reasons do not seem inclined to do so, enough have gone to produce a decided change in the appearance of many sections of the city. Most of those who return will have increased appetites, there will be a renewed demand for the luxuries and comforts of life, and business men of all kinds will prepare for an active Fall and Winter campaign.

They Say

That because the local editors of some of our contemporaries have not the cleverness to originate a special column of their own, nor the ability to sustain its interest, they have become chronic opposers of the new departures of others.

That they should devote the little energy they have to the needed improvement of their own particular pages, and not endeavor to accomplish reform in the columns of their superiors.

That there is a standing reward for the arrest and conviction of Plainfield's incendiaries. If so it should be officially and publicly announced.

That the chimney erecting to carry off the fumes from the oil-cloth factory, will not remedy the evil.

That in view of the importance of speedily erecting a new Grammar school building, the absent members of the Board of Education should have arranged their private engagements in a way that would have allowed them to attend a meeting for the purpose some time ago.

That a well-known grocer not far from this office, locked his store door on Tuesday evening without shutting it.

That the excursion to the Highlands on Tuesday next, will be the largest and most enjoyable.

That the competent chemist engaged by Messrs. Newell & Wight in their endeavors to overcome what the Council of '81 would call "stenches offensive to the senses," is our old friend Thos. B. Stillman, Esq., than whom no more gifted and efficient chemist is known.

That a former resident of this city but three weeks married, has sent his wife to North Plainfield for a fortnight vacation.

That the Knights of Pythias' excursion to Ocean Grove on Monday next, is to be one of the most successful of the Season.

That the Board of Education will meet the three architects separately on Wednesday, Thursday and this evening, and possibly adopt one of the plans submitted for a new Grammar School building.

That when Superintendent Williams of the Oil-cloth Factory first saw the works after their completion, he remarked: "The citizens are sure to complain of the bad odors that will arise around them when we commence to manufacture."

That by the increase of valuation of property in this city during the past year, the tax is reduced 12 cents on each one hundred dollars.

FIRE MATTERS.

The reflection of a fire on the sky during Wednesday evening of last week, proved to have been caused by the burning of a barn belonging to Nicholas Glaser. The structure was situated on Raymond avenue near the residence of Mr. Milford Coles, and has been set on fire twice within the last few months. On Wednesday evening the entire building and its contents were consumed, creating a loss of about $300 which was promptly settled by Insurance Agent Wm. Woodruff.

The active and exempt members of Gazelle Engine Co. No. 1, have as yet taken no action in relation to the acceptance and disposition of the old hand-engine so kindly (?) presented by the Board of Managers. A meeting should be called at once and something done regarding the matter.

Incendiarism is once more developing in our midst, and unless something is speedily done to stimulate the assistance of capable detectives we may look for a destructive conflagration in the very heart of our city. During Thursday evening of last week a member of No. 2 Engine Co. "discovered an attempt to fire an out-house" that stood in the rear of and closely adjoining the Livery Stables of D. S. Roberts. The striking of a match revealed the incendiary crouching down near the building as if to set it on fire, but upon being approached he escaped through the bushes that line the bank of the brook at this spot. No signs of any inflammable material were apparent, and how it is possible to kindle an out-house with a match is not explained, yet the circumstances is retailed as an attempt to burn Laing's Hotel, the stables and their contents.

At about eleven o'clock of Friday night, an employee of Mr. Alex. Warnock, the Front street baker (who recently lost his barn by fire) discovered smoke issuing from between the outside boarding of a frame building back of the shop. Tearing off the clapboards it was found that cotton waste soaked with kerosene had been crowded inside the frame and then lighted. Water thrown on the mass appeared to put out the flames, but a short time after it burned up again and was then taken out from behind the boards and thoroughly extinguished.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

At the primary held at Demler's Hotel on Saturday last, Justice of the Peace S. O. Horton presided and the following were elected delegates to the Fourth Congressional District Democratic Convention at Newton, on Thursday, the 17th inst: D. J. Carney, Richard Coleman and A. L. Force.

The Township Committee met according to law on Tuesday evening, and received from Assessor Brokaw the tax duplicate for the year. The assessment was most creditable to that officer, and only one slight change was made.

Collector VanNorstrand having given all due notice, will proceed in a few days to advertise and sell according to law the property of all those in arrears for taxes due the Township.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

President Vosseller, of the "New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society," has presented that organization with a set of handsome pictures representing sporting scenes, which will adorn the side walls of the Society's meeting rooms on Park Avenue.

WITH the first issue in August, the popular New York Journal, Forest and Stream, has been enlarged to 24 pages, weekly; the Forest and Stream is devoted to Angling, Shooting and Yachting, and kindred out-of-door manly recreations. It is one of the most remarkable journalistic successes of the day, having an excellent corps of contributors, and a wonderful circulation all over the country. In appearance, size and quality of contents, the paper is a model, and deserves all the credit it has won. It is published by the Forest and Stream Publishing Co., 39 Park Row, New York City.

The large barn and wagon house belonging to VanSandt Bros., near Blawenburgh, Somerset County, was entirely destroyed by fire on Thursday night of last week, together with most of the contents. The family were away from home at the time attending a harvest home near that place. A colored girl about eighteen years of age, who worked for the family, was at once accused of firing the buildings, and finally confessed her guilt. She was arrested on Saturday and brought to Somerville and lodged in jail to await the action of the next Grand Jury. The loss is estimated at between $[illegible] and $[illegible], on which there is an insurance of $[illegible] in the [illegible] and Princeton companies.

He had been in declining health for a year or two, and last Fall went West to endeavor to regain it. He failed to improve and returned home about two weeks ago, and lingered until Tuesday morning, when death claimed him as its victim.

Very interesting services were held on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at the Temperance meeting which was held in Squire Pearsall's office. The Rev. Mr. Marshall, pastor of the African M. E. church, delivered an address. Mr. Jas. Perrine of Spring street, made some very appropriate remarks. We understand next Sunday afternoon, services will be held in the lecture room of the M. E. church.

A party of fifteen, residents of our town, went on a fishing excursion on Wednesday. They had Rob't Woodruff, Jr's stage and four horses attached, who drove them to Perth Amboy, where they chartered a sloop for a sail and fishing expedition. After arriving on the fishing grounds and trying to catch fish for about an hour, in which they did not prove very successful, they started on their return trip, but the wind proved a failure, and they were stuck in a dead calm for about four hours, with plenty to eat on board but nothing to moisten their parched lips. In the language of one of the party, it was the longest four hours he ever spent in his life. They arrived home at about ten o'clock in the evening, very much tired out. We wish them better luck next time.

A disgraceful scene occurred on Saturday last around our depot. A gang of Plainfield roughs, with others from a neighboring village, visited our place as they say, to engage in a game of base ball with some of the young men of our town, but failing to find anybody willing to play with them, they indulged in intoxicating drinks which they brought with them, until finally it ended in a scrimmage at the depot, one of the party flourishing a loaded revolver, threatening to shoot. He was finally captured and the revolver taken away from him without doing any harm. The Plainfield gang then went to the ball grounds and tried to create a row, where there was a friendly game in progress between the Westfield base-ball nine and the Elizabeth Club. The Westfield boys finally succeeded in getting them to leave under a threat that they would have them arrested.

COMMUNICATED.

For "The Constitutionalist."

MESSRS EDITORS:—

You say in "they say" column of two weeks ago, "that if the Hackmen were posted, they would not have to pay either license fee or fines." Such is the fact, the same as to expressmen, etc., and our worthy councilmen and other officials don't seem to know it. We would say to them "wake up, gentlemen, be sure you are right and then go ahead." M.

For "The Constitutionalist."

To the Editors of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST and to Parents in Plainfield:

I have been introduced to the people of Plainfield as the Associate of Prof. James Lyon in educational work in this city.

I am happy to say I have made Plainfield my home and as my work will be devoted to the public, it may be proper for me to address the people of Plainfield and vicinity. I have chosen this city for my field of labor not because of the want of another chance, for I have refused many advantageous offers; but I have chosen this place because I feel the want of a school of such a character as we intend to establish in this town. I am fully aware of the existence of a public school that is an honor to its founders and I heartily congratulate the city on that account. No one will say for that reason that the establishment of a high graded school, an Academy in the true sense of the word, is not wanted, on the contrary, we believe we will supply a pressing necessity.

Plainfield, renowned as a city of refinement, is a place of 12,000 people. It has a right to claim the finest and most healthful situation, and being connected by rail with New York and Philadelphia, it is easily accessible from everywhere. We find prospering "Academies" in places of 1500 inhabitants within ten or fifteen miles from the railroad, why then should an institution, which will prove satisfactory, not succeed in Plainfield, a city affording every advantage? Why should parents send their sons out of town for a high education, depriving in that way the city, instead of advancing the interests of the place by receiving boys in town?

The Plainfield Academy, administered on the principles of kindness, yet firmness, will henceforth be jointly conducted by Prof. James Lyon and me, and we will endeavor to confirm and advance the high reputation which the school has attained during its first decade. It is the design of the Principals to build up a school for our youth, of the highest order, in which they will receive a careful intellectual training in the various branches of learning and such esthetic culture as will refine the manners, improve the taste together with careful religious and moral instruction. Another aim of the school will be to make the instruction thorough and practical, and no pupil will be allowed to remain in the school without receiving the full value for time and money invested.

Great care will be exercised in the choice of our assistant teachers and we propose to furnish facilities not second to those of the larger College Preparatory schools. We know well that our success will largely depend upon ourselves, yet we take hereby occasion to ask for the generous patronage of our citizens.

Our undertaking is not a mere private speculation but it will rather prove a public benediction. The controlling purpose of the Principals is to advance the sublime cause of Education and common welfare by bringing our promising youth under influences that should foster in them a noble manhood; to lay broad and deep the foundations of their usefulness and happiness, and to plant in the heart of the city an institution that shall go on expanding and blessing long after its founders have passed away.

J. G. LEWINSKY.

The Clarendon House, Temperance Hotel, of Hackettstown, has changed proprietors. As a temperance house, pure and simple, it did not prosper and now it has gone into the hands of H. H. Van Deusen, the Greenback apostle for that vicinity, and we presume is here to be run as a Greenback, temperance and money [illegible].—Phillipsburg Democrat.

Respectfully Declined.

We are in receipt of a communication from a literary lady of spiritual proclivities, covering twenty-two closely written pages, illustrative of a dream penned in true Revelation style. The writer (as an instance of the nature of the production before us) saw Guiteau "and two other gentlemen" sitting on a seat in the spirit world in converse sweet. It is revealed to her, also, that the Pope is coming here to be President, and will be received by the faithful with hosannas, and that he will cause our streets to run red with blood for seven frightful years, and that it will require some Cornwallian to drive the "Beast" out. We are after sensational matter, but this dream, vision, or revelation, is a "huckleberry above our persimmon." We don't want to terrify the community during the ascendancy of the dog star, nor disobey the behests of the spirits who would fain run a newspaper, but our proof-reader is too nervous to stand the infliction. Moreover, have we not had a surfeit of wars, assassinations, religious persecutions, pestilence and famine? They are as old as the world, and we always expect to have such companions while this mundane ball swings in illimitable space. One Christian roasting another alive is a matter of history, and the spirit world, in this particular, gives us no new knowledge. Independent of these objections, the essay is too ponderous, and, as the elections are coming on, politicians might be afraid, after perusing the vision, to put their candidates in the field, and then the ruin of the country would be complete. Our Chess Editor, too, is engrossed in certain abstruse theories and latent problems, and, were he to hear this voice from the land where "incorporeal forms reduce their shapes immense," he would abandon his profound meditations and roam about aimlessly with horror sitting planted upon his usually serene brow. We are sorry, but we must decline to publish the "dream." It is a literary gem of the first water, and speaks with a voice of thunder to the heart, but we trepidate at the idea of putting the startling details into type.—Elizabeth Herald.

One of the greatest causes for the general denuding of forests in this section is the vast amount of timber required for protecting the iron mines.—Few people, outside the business, have any comprehensive idea of the amount that is thus consumed, but they can get an inkling from the fact that one mine alone of the many in this county has consumed for this purpose in four years a tract of over one hundred acres of timber. This is the Dickerson, which, as announced last week, will be so changed as to the methods of working as to save some of this enormous expense for timbering.—Iron Era.

THE SUEZ CANAL

The Suez Canal which now has assumed a position of greater importance than it has ever before, was begun toward the close of 1860. Work was prosecuted steadily until 1863, when there was a kink among the authorities, and had it not been for the enterprise and liberality of the late Emperor of France, who advanced $19,000,000 to the Viceroy to be paid to the Company, it is doubtless whether the gigantic undertaking ever would have been finished. The water began to flow from the Mediterranean in February, 1869, and from the Red Sea in July, and by the middle of October of the same year, navigation was a settled thing.

The whole length of the navigation is 88 miles; of this 66 miles are actual canal, formed by cuttings, 14 miles are dredged through the lakes, and 8 miles required no work, the natural depth being equal to that of the canal. The depth of the canal throughout is 26 feet, for a width of 72 feet at the bottom. The width at the surface is 325 feet. Its actual width does not permit of two vessels passing or crossing each other in the canal itself, but there are numerous sidings by which vessels are enabled to cross one another and the passage is quickened. The largest vessel that ever passed through the canal measured 430 feet in length, with a draught of 25 feet 9 inches. The cost of the whole undertaking was £17,518,729, exclusive of £1,360,000 issued to pay for coupons on shares in arrear during part of the period of construction. Nearly 30,000 laborers were employed, and for their use a supply of fresh water was conveyed from the Nile at Cairo and distributed along the whole length of the canal, a work which of itself was one of no small magnitude. During the work about 80,000,000 cubic yards of material were excavated and at one time sixty dredging machines were at work.

POETRY.

THE SHIPS THAT SAIL AWAY.

I think of the ships that sail away—
The white-winged ships that sail away,
Freighted with hopes and wasted tears,
And toys we garnered for long, long years,
For the possible rainy day.

I sleep and dream of the white-winged ships,
That glide from the moorings of the away!
That swiftly glide with the ebbing tide,
Bearing my joys to the farther side,
Into the twilight gray.

Oh, ships that vanish into the past!
Are none to return to the port at last?
Shall I vainly wait at the seaward gate,
Beaten and bruised, and wasted by fate?
Chilled by the winter blast?

The ships that carry my good, alas!
Have sails of [illegible] and shrouds of brass!
The storm's impact leaves them intact,
Though beaten on the jagged rocks of Fate,
Which fearful breakers mass!

TROT!

A CHRISTMAS STORY

"Hopedale!"

I opened my sleepy eyes as the conductor's voice rang through the cars, and, taking my carpet bag, sprang out upon the platform of the little station.

As I turned to descend the steps leading to the road, some impulse led me to look in at the window of the room by courtesy called "Ladies' Room," of the station. It was cold and desolate. But curled up on one of the benches, sleeping soundly, lay a strange child. His dress of rich, fur-trimmed velvet, the warm fur cap, long gaiters, and mittens, spoke of wealth and care, and the pale face, round which clustered short curls of sunny-brown, was round with health and wonderfully beautiful. He was no Hopedale child; I knew them all. My professional instinct made my heart thrill with a sudden shock as I caught sight of the pale face, for well I knew the danger of that deep sleep in a biting winter air. Mantling him warmly in my heavy cloak I tore down the steps and raced along the road homeward at a pace that would have considerably amazed my patients, had any of them been awake at that early hour.

Allowing Mrs. Watson no time for amazement, I pressed her into service and in what she called "a jiffy," we had the little form undressed, in my bed, and undergoing the most vigorous treatment.

He was safe now, I knew; so leaving him to Mrs. Watson's care, who by this time knew as much about him as I did, I went to sleep myself, to be ready for the day's duty.

It was nearly nine o'clock when my housekeeper roused me to say that my breakfast was ready and waiting, and the child awake.

Very wide awake I found him.

"Who are you? How did I get here? Am I nearly at Australia? Who is that man in the picture?" were the questions poured rapidly forth, before I had time to frame an inquiry. "I want to get up! Who's got my clothes?" came next; then, "Who put me in bed without any night-gown?"

Not a sign of fear or a word of homesickness.

"What is your name?" I asked, sitting down beside him.

"Trot! I want to get up!"

"You shall get up in a minute, but first tell me your name, and how you came to be asleep in the station."

"My name is Trot; and the plaguy cars started off without me when I got out. It was a dark night, and I could not catch them as I went into the room and went to sleep until they came again."

"Was your mother on the train—in the car?"

"No; nobody but just me. I'm going to Australia."

"Going to Australia?"

"Yes; Ellen's there! They have roses there in Christmas, and we wanted some for our tree."

"But, my child, you did not leave home alone?"

"Yes I did! I ain't afraid! I'm going back right away, as soon as I find Ellen and get the roses."

"But don't you know you will have to sail in a grand ship for months to get to Australia?"

"Ellen went in the cars. We saw her go, mamma and I. We went in the carriage and said good-bye, and she got in the cars with Mr. Williams."

"Who is Mr. Williams?" I said eagerly catching at a name.

"Ellen's husband."

"And who was Ellen?"

"My nurse."

"What's your father's name?"

"Papa."

But his other name.

"Harry, dear,' mamma always called him so."

"Where does he live?"

"He is dead!" said the child in a whisper.

"Well, where does mamma live?"

"At Grandma's with Aunt Daisy, and Howard, and Sue, and baby, and—ain't it funny?—baby's my uncle, and he's so little he has to be carried about, and Howard's littler than me, and he's my uncle too; and Sue's only six and she is my aunt."

"And where does grandma live?"

"Home in her own house."

"Well, what is her name?"

"Grandma!"

Persistent questioning revealed that he had lived in a large house in the country, but that was all. His clothing of the most dainty materials and make were marked with the initials 'A. G.'

Days passed away, and still the little Trot—for he would own no other name—was an inmate of my cottage, the very darling of Mrs. Watson's motherly heart. I advertised him in all the large cities, hoping some paper would reach his country home; yet as the days wore away, and he became reconciled to his new home, and ceased to grieve for his family, I began to dread the hour when he would be claimed.

Eleven months had this dear little treasure been an inmate of my house, when there came into my life a new dream of hope and happiness. About five miles from Hopedale there resided and had lived for many long years, an eccentric old bachelor, by name Thomas Graham. It was towards November that I was summoned to attend this odd genius, professionally. The little note brought to my office by an elderly man on horseback, was signed 'Lillian Graham,' and urged my immediate attention.

"I had no idea your master had a daughter," I replied, referring to my note.

"That's master's niece," was the reply; "a nice, sweet-spoken young lady as I ever see. She comes down on a visit sometimes from her father's place near Albany. They're coming down for Christmas, I expect."

I found my new patient very ill, and for a week my visits were frequent and more than once I passed a whole night by his bedside. I will not weary my reader with the why and wherefore of my heart bending in allegiance to Lillian Graham's charms.

As her uncle began to recover, my visits slid from a professional capacity to a social one, and I saw that my welcome was a sincere one both from the old gentleman and the fair girl.

Christmas was drawing near, and I resolved to lay my heart before Lilian, and ask her to be my wife. I was heir to considerable property left by my father. I had a good practice, a pleasant house, and could offer her the pure love of a young heart, so I was not without hope, especially as I could see the flush deepen on her blue eyes when I was announced.

It was the day before Christmas, and the snow was smooth and hard around Hopedale; so I ventured to propose a sleigh-ride, meaning to open my heart to her as we drove. She accepted my proposal readily, and we were soon on our way.

"I expect my parents, brothers and sisters here to-morrow."

"For the Christmas gayeties?" I questioned.

"No, to escape them. They are coming here to pass the day quietly, far away from any festivity. It is a sad day for us. Doctor, do you really believe in a broken heart?"

"Yes; I know they exist."

"And are fatal?"

"Sometimes! I have seen heavy sorrow drain away life!"

"My poor sister," she said sadly, her eyes filling with tears, I fear her heart is broken." And after a pause she said: "A year ago—a year ago—poor, dear little Trot!"

"Trot!" I exclaimed breathlessly.

"My sister's only child, who died on Christmas day last year."

"Died?" I said, my hopes sinking.

"Burned to death!" she said sadly. "We had had a Christmas tree for the children in the nursery, and lighted it on Christmas Eve. The next morning they, the children I mean, were all in the nursery, and we suppose one of them tried to light the tree. Certain it is that they set the room on fire, and before we could save anything the whole was in flames. All escaped but my sister's child, her only one; he perished in the flames."

"Are you certain?"

"Where else could he be? My two little brothers and my sister were saved with difficulty, and the roof fell in while we were frantically searching and calling for Arthur, or, as we always called him, Trot. My sister's health gave way entirely under this blow. She had concentrated all the strength of her love upon this child after her husband died, and the loss prostrated her utterly. We took her to Europe; we have had the best advice for her, but she is dying slowly of a broken heart."

"This little child—had a pet name for you?"

"Yes; my home name. They all call me Daisy, and he called me Aunt Daisy."

"And your sister's names are Mary and Sue, your brothers' Howard and Baby?"

"Yes, yes," she said, turning pale.

"And Trot's nurse, Ellen did she go to Australia?"

"Yes a year ago last fall."

We were at my door; her face was ashy white with emotion, but she obeyed my motion, and let me lead her from the sleigh to my office. I made her sit down and began to explain, when—"Uncle Charley's come!" and Trot burst into the room. Lilian rose to her feet with a wild cry of "Trot! Arthur! darling!"

For a moment he stood bewildered; then a sudden rush of memory came over the childish heart, and he sprang into her arms.

"Aunt Daisy! Where's mamma? I want mamma! Quick! quick! Dear Uncle Charley, Aunt Daisy, take me to my mamma!"

For nearly three hours we sat in the little office before Lilian could tear herself away from the child, but at last she let me take her to the sleigh, consoling Trot by a promise that to-morrow he should see his mother.

I left the disclosure to her womanly tact. But on the morrow, when I dressed him in his black velvet suit, altered to fit by Mrs. Watson's trembling fingers, and moistened I am sure by many tears, I found all prepared for the great joy.

Such a Christmas never dawned for me. To tell of the gratitude of the pale widow, the joy of the grandparents, the greetings between the children, is beyond the powers of my pen to describe.

Of course the precise time and manner of Arthur's escape from the house we could only conjecture. The nurse was in the kitchen nearly an hour when the alarm of fire was given, and the flames had gained great headway before they were discovered, the family sitting-room being on a different floor, and some distance from the nursery. Of course the fearless boy had left the house before the attempt to light the tree was made, but the others absorbed in Christmas delights did not miss him. The distance from the house to the station was very short, and Ellen had gone to New York from the little village near which Mr. Graham's house was situated. The departure for Europe, and the certainty all felt of his fate, had prevented any search being made for the boy, and we presumed the railway officials supposed he belonged to some party on the train.

It was a glad day for all, for if I lost my little treasure, I won from Lilian the right to be called in good truth Trot's Uncle Charley.

HIS HONOR AND ELIJAH.

A SCENE IN THE DETROIT POLICE COURT.

"For the land's sake! but what does all this mean?" exclaimed Thomas Jones, as he stood at the desk and looked around him. "Why I actually believe I'm having a law suit!"

"Thomas Jones!" replied his Honor, in a deep, hoarse voice, "you live among the groves and fields and brooks and green meadows."

"I does, sir."

"You know but little of the great world's wicked ways, and the snares and pit-falls set to catch the unwary."

"That's so Squar.' I never played but one game of keerds in my life, and it's twenty-two years since I saw a circus."

"You came to the city yesterday to dispose of eight bushels of new potatoes."

"Yes, and they were the finest taters I ever saw."

"After selling your load and pocketing your money you bought a box of axle-grease, five yards of calico, four pounds of sugar, a clothes-line and a plug of tobacco."

"Yes, I did."

"And then a certain desire seized you to drink a brandy smash. You had read of them and heard of them and felt a great curiosity to know how they acted on the human system. You left your horse hitched to a post and entered a saloon and shoved your hat well on your ear, and spit clear across the room, and swore a few oaths, and said you'd be hanged if you couldn't afford a good, old-fashioned brandy-smash, and you wanted plenty of good brandy in it, too!"

"That's me, Squar'—that's just what I said and just how I acted. Oh! gracy! but I wish I could sink through this floor!"

"You got your smash and smashed out doors, and in ten minutes was stepping high and anxious to fight somebody."

"I presume so. You offered to stand a respectable citizen on his head for three cents."

"And he closed with the offer?"

"You look as if he did. You had thirteen different bumps on your head this morning, and by noon your left eye will be entirely closed. I think you also lost four of your front teeth."

"By the horn spoon, but I did!" exclaimed the farmer as he put his hands up. "I was wondering what made me limp so. Then I didn't get away with him!"

"Not exactly. You were unconscious when the officer picked you up. Thomas Jones, this is a very sad case."

"'Tis just that, sir—oh— Why I must have acted like a regular big fool!"

"You should let brandy smashes and all sort of drink alone. What possesses a man like you to hanker after drunkenness is more than I can wrestle with."

"Squar', look me in the eye! Thomas Jones will never again drink a drop of anything stronger than ginger tea!"

"I hope not."

"I'm ashamed of myself, and I want to pay the damages and get out where I can kick old Tom Jones forty minutes without stopping! How much will it take to square the job up?"

"Do you think this will be a lesson for you?"

"Do I? Why, it won't be forgotten if I live nineteen millions of years!"

"And you will quit drinking?"

"I'll quit if I loose the last steer on my farm!"

"Then you may go."

"Isn't there forty or fifty dollars to pay?"

"No, nothing."

"Squar', good-bye! I'll be hanged if you ain't white all over! I'm grateful—grateful as a dog, and if you like harvest apples—if you want any watermelons—if you have any use for turnips—"

Elijah put him gently out, and at the door he shed seven tears, and said he'd bring His Honor a new milch cow if he had to steal one.—Free Press.

Democratic Nominations.

FOR CONGRESS
IV DIST.—HENRY S. HARRIS,
of Warren County.

3rd Congressional Dist., Democratic Convention!

The Democratic electors of the Third Congressional District of New Jersey are requested to meet in their several townships and wards, at such times and places as may be designated, in accordance with the usages of the party in their several counties, and appoint one delegate for every one hundred and one for every fraction over fifty Democratic votes cast in said township and wards at the last Gubernatorial election, to represent said electors in the Democratic Convention for said District, to be held in the city of FREEHOLD, ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12th, at 12 o'clock, m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to represent said District in the Congress of the United States.

HENRY W. LONG,
Chairman of last Convention.

Englishtown, Aug. 11, 1882.

☞ Democratic papers throughout the District are requested to notice the time and place of holding the Convention.

THIRD TERMERS.

Robeson, of New Jersey, the boss appropriation engineer in the present Congress, wants badly to be returned for a third term, giving as a reported reason, that "at least two terms are requisite for any Congressman to perfectly understand his business."

Multitudes of South Jersey Republicans shake their heads, while many of them stamp feet and utter words more forcible than polite.

The excuse is flimsy—"werry much perforated," as Sam Weller would say.

Men of common sense can see straight through it.

They know full well why patriots of the Robesonian stamp desire continuance in Congress beyond the customary length of time.

A man who goes to Congress as a real representative of the people, determined to serve them only, openly and honestly, will know what duty is, and furthermore, will fearlessly discharge it from the very moment he takes upon himself the oath of membership, and will be content to withdraw at the end of a second term.

It don't require four years nor four months to acquaint such a Congressman with all the legitimate duties of his position.

If he enters with mercenary objects in view, one term is too long for public benefit, saying naught about a third.

There is both safety and justice in the two term principle.

It applies with equal virtue to a Congressman as to a President.

Let it be preserved.

THUNDER.

When certain Congressmen a few years ago entangled themselves in the net of Credit Mobilier, and when they indecently grabbed a large amount of unearned pay, public sentiment made violent protest and sent not a few limping into retirement.

Those crooked doings awoke a storm of popular indignation, yet its howlings were mild compared with that created by the transgressions of the existing Congress.

The hurricane is sweeping.

All over the land the people are affronted and hard to appease. With rare exceptions, newspapers of both political parties join in earnest censure of those who voted for Congressional extravagance and waste. Some of the condemned Representatives have ventured to explain, but with indifferent success. Several have already been flatly refused a re-nomination, while others have squeezed through by the skin of their teeth.

DEMOCRATS OF UNION.

The Democratic Convention for the selection of a candidate to represent the Third District in Congress has been called to meet in Freehold, on the 12th of September.

Democrats of Union! An important duty now devolves upon you!

It is to convene in your respective wards and townships and elect as delegates judicious men, who, when assembled together at Freehold, casting aside all minor considerations, will earnestly strive to unite upon some Union County man, capable and worthy, and with unbroken front present his name to the Convention and stand by it.

Union County is fairly entitled to the nomination.

If the Democrats of Union are true to her name, from among their number can be selected a candidate to bear the Congressional banner on to victory.

Make Union your watchword!

The Democratic County Executive Committee meets to-day (Friday) and will designate the time of holding Primary meetings to elect delegates to attend the Third Congressional District Convention. The call will appear in our next issue.

The Hunterdon County Democrat refuses to support the Democratic nominee for Congress in the Fourth District, Hon. Henry S. Harris, because he voted for the River and Harbor bill, whereat the Republican press gleefully shouts—"good boy."

We sympathize with our brethren of the Elizabeth Herald, who had the misfortune to "pie" the forms of their paper as they were going to press last week. We have "been there" and know just how it is ourselves.

The Nationals of the Third Congressional District will hold a Convention at Elizabeth, Tuesday Aug. 29th, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress. The party from Plainfield will attend in a body, being transported there in a buggy.

The election in Alabama resulted in 88,087 Democratic majority; the Legislature standing thus: Senate—Democrats, 31; opposition, 2. The House—Democrats, 79; opposition, 21. Of the latter 8 are Republicans, 4 Greenbackers and 9 Independent Democrats.

The Delaware Democratic Convention met at Dover Tuesday and nominated Charles P. Stockley for Governor.

FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT CONVENTION.

On Thursday last the representatives of the Democratic party in Somerset, Hunterdon, Warren and Sussex counties met in Convention at Newton, Sussex county, to nominate a candidate for Congress in the Fourth Congressional District, embracing the above mentioned counties. The Convention was called to order by Judge Wm. H. Morrow, of Warren county, and Hon. James J. Bergen, of Somerset, appointed temporary Chairman. After Judge Morrow had made a short speech to the Convention, he moved that Hon. Henry S. Harris be invited to address the assemblage and explain his vote on the River and Harbor bill when it came before him in Congress. The Committee appointed soon introduced Mr. Harris, who, in an easy, off-hand manner, addressed the Convention in a speech of about one half hour in length. He declared, that in voting for the measure, he had acted with honesty of purpose and solely for what he believed to be the public good. He was frequently applauded during his remarks, at the conclusion of which the Convention adjourned until two o'clock, p. m.

Upon re-assembling, ex-Congressman Hon. Alvah A. Clark, of Somerset, was nominated and elected permanent Chairman.

After calling the Convention to order, Mr. Clark read off a speech, in which he declared that the people had pronounced in favor of economy and reform, and plainly intimated that rebellion against the precedent in making nominations might be justified by party demands. The desire to be kind to individuals should not outweigh devotion to principles. The River and Harbor bill, he said, contained many appropriations for little streams that were not demanded as measures for the public defense. They were only for the benefit of localities. A change of two votes in the House of Representatives would have defeated this measure that he believed to be odious and unjust. Their own Representative, for reasons he himself regarded wise, had voted for this bill. If the Convention approved his act it should follow the precedent; if it disapproved of it it should nominate some one else.

The Chairman's speech greatly incensed the Harris men, who thought the presiding officer was taking unfair advantage of his position. When he finished, Judge Morrow, in a sarcastic manner, moved that before there was any further electioneering the roll of counties be called for the naming of candidates. This prevailed. Hunterdon county named Henry S. Harris and Martin Wycoff, both of Warren; Somerset had no candidate; Sussex named Lewis Cochran and Henry S. Harris. When Warren's turn came Judge Morrow mounted the platform. He spoke slowly and in a low tone, but was evidently nursing his wrath. He had, he said, been in many close places in his lifetime, but never in such a situation as this. He had never before heard the Chairman of a Democratic Convention—

The Chairman (rapping his gavel)—The gentleman is out of order. No reflections upon the Chair will be allowed.

Judge Morrow—The Convention will understand without my saying anything further.

Judge Morrow then proceeded with his speech, and succeeded in striking the Chairman a blow below the belt by saying that the candidate who had been endorsed in the Convention was at all events not a representative of a minority, as was his predecessor (Mr. Clark). He demanded the re-nomination of Mr. Harris as the right of Warren county. He asserted that the representatives of the Warren County Ring, that Harris had crushed, were here in force to defeat him by raising the cry of corruption. How would it sound to have it go out that ex-graduates of the State Prison dictated this nomination?

There were several lively tilts between the Chairman and Judge Morrow and two or three delegates who attempted to shut the speaker off felt the touch of the Judge's caustic tongue, much to the amusement of the Convention.

Three ballots decided the result. Eighty-six votes were necessary to nominate.

The first ballot stood:

	Harris.	Wycoff.	Cochran.
Hunterdon	21	25	—
Somerset	14	13	—
Sussex	7	—	25
Warren	29	29	—
Total	71	71	25

The second ballot resulted as follows:

	Harris.	Wycoff.	Cochran.
Hunterdon	21	—	35
Somerset	15	15	—
Sussex	7	—	25
Warren	35	17	—
Total	78	32	60

There were disputes over the count in the Warren and Hunterdon delegations, and much confusion in the Convention. A third ballot was nearly completed when the Chairman of the Warren delegation withdrew Wycoff's name, amid the cheers of the Harris men. Ballots for Wycoff that had been deposited in hats were fished out and torn up. After some delay the vote was announced.

	Harris.	Cochran.
Hunterdon	22	33
Somerset	21	9
Sussex	6	26
Warren	39	13
Total	88	81

The delegates elected from Somerset county were:

North Plainfield—A. L. Force, David J. Carney, Richard J. Coleman.

Hillsborough—R. H. Veghte, Samuel Corie, Andrew Lane.

Bedminster—Joseph Nevius, Emanuel Woods, Ralph Davenport.

Bridgewater—A. S. Ten Eyck, Oscar Dow, Geo. W. Vroom, Wm. Ross, Jr., A. A. Clark, John S. Bishop, J. D. Bartine, Jas. J. Bergen, Austin Moore.

Bernards—Dr. Jas. Doty, W. A. McMurtry, Oliver Dunster, John Compton.

Branchburg—John S. Ten Eyck.

No delegates were elected in the townships of Franklin, Montgomery and Warren, and consequently were not represented.

Hon. R. H. Veghte was chosen Chairman of the Somerset county delegation and James J. Bergen, Secretary. The Chairman was instructed to cast the whole vote of the county as if it was fully represented, in accordance with the sentiment of the majority of the delegates who were present.

New York has not our excellent Jersey Constitutional provision, making the Governor ineligible to re-election except after an intervening term. Consequently, Governor Cornell having served one term, is a natural candidate for his own succession.

It is announced that the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise are about to make a tour of the West from Detroit to San Francisco.

HON. HENRY S. HARRIS' SPEECH.

The following are the remarks of Hon. Henry S. Harris, in vindication of his vote on the River and Harbor bill, made before the Democratic Congressional Convention, at Newton, N. J., on Thursday of last week:

Gentlemen of the 4th Congressional District:

I gladly respond to your request for information relative to the River and Harbor bill, about which so much has lately been said, to a very great extent by persons evidently wholly uninformed or imperfectly informed about it.

I voted for the bill on its first passage, and to pass it over the veto of the President; because after studying the report of surveys and estimates made by the corps of Engineers, transmitted to Congress by the President, and reading the memorial of the Mississippi River Improvement Convention of 1881, and hearing the discussion of the bill in the House of Representatives, and reflecting carefully upon the interests of our own State, I thought it right to do so.

The River and Harbor bill is a regular and customary appropriation bill, and is devoted to the same objects as like bills have been for years past, and such as have been supported by former representatives from this district—among them the eloquent and distinguished gentleman from the county of Somerset. The amount appropriated has increased, it is true, but in a greater degree has the country grown in wealth and commerce, in need for facilities for movement of products and in ability to supply them.

This was not a party political measure, nor was it framed with regard thereto.—The advocates of internal improvements have been confined to no party in the past, nor are they now. Among them are men of every shade of political opinion.

In November, 1845, five hundred delegates met at Memphis, Tenn., to consider and further the improvement of the Mississippi river. The President of the convention was that incarnation of democracy, John C. Calhoun, and he there boldly declared that it was one of the functions of the general government to contribute to and take charge of the improvement of that river.

At the convention held with the same object two years later, were Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Corwin, David Dudley Field, Horace Greeley, (once I believe your candidate for the presidency), Senator Stewart, of Pennsylvania, and Thos. Butler King, of Georgia, and letters favoring and urging the purposes of the convention were received from Henry Clay and Silas Wright. Does any one question the democratic faith and principles of Silas Wright?

Reflect upon the vast number of Democratic Senators and Representatives who have supported River and Harbor bills in years past and upon those who favored this one: Senators Brown, Butler, Call, Camden, Cockrell, Coke, Davis, W. Va., Maxey, Pugh, Ransom, Slater, Vest, Voorhees, Walker, Williams, Gorman, Grover, Farley, Hampton, Jackson, Jonas and Jones, of Fla. Representatives Adams, Blackburn, Barbour, Bliss, Buckner, Ellis, Forney, R. Gibson, Hatch, Herndon, House, Kenna, Manning, McLane, Mills, Phelps, Conn., Reagan, Rosecrans, Ross, Speer, A. H. Stephens, Tucker, Upson, Wellborn, Vance, Wise, of Va., and a host of others.

Are these men swindlers? Are George Vest and Dan Voorhees and Wade Hampton cheats? Are Atkins, Blackburn, Gibson, Reagan and McLane corrupt? Are General Rosecrans, and Alex. H. Stephens and Randolph Tucker thieves? If they are let us dissolve the Democratic party, enlist under the great and good Arthur—so eloquent in praise of Dorsey's use of "soap" in Indiana—and mount to glory behind his flaming banner of reform. (Applause.)

New Jersey is a Maritime State. She has more coasts, rivers and harbors, proportionate to area, than any state in the union. She receives between four and five hundred thousand dollars under this bill—the exact figures being $417,975, the most of it applicable only to works already in progress or for which appropriation has already been made, and necessary to be continued to completion in order to be beneficial.

The bill also contains an appropriation for surveys among which is specified the Delaware river between Trenton and Port Jervis, skirting the counties of Hunterdon, Warren and Sussex, and to the improvement of which, if feasible, both General Kilpatrick and myself, in 1880, pledged our best efforts, with the warm applause of the citizens along the river, some of whom are here to-day. Proper appropriations for that object may yet be made and will be unless the people of the region to be presumably benefitted do not wish it.

The money appropriated by the bill in question is paid to the laborers of the country in exchange for work so applied as to be permanent in beneficial results. It is not wasted or lost like the expenditure for wars and the necessary maintenance of land and naval forces.

Furthermore the appropriation is honestly expended under the restrictions of law by the Secretary of War. Concerning the present Secretary, the New York Sun the day before yesterday speaking of his being the sole representative of our itinerant government, in Washington, said: "A better man could not be left." All who know him will concur in that opinion. Secretary Lincoln is an upright, honorable gentleman.

Upon this topic relative to the methods of expenditure I ask your attention to the following expression of Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, which just came to my notice:

"The public is perfectly protected. The money is to be expended by an executive department, subordinate to the President. If there be an unconstitutional provision in it, it is not only in his power but it will be his duty, not to carry that provision into effect. This bill is not like the ordinary appropriation bills, under which the money is to be spent within the year. There is no limit or enactment as to the time within which the work shall be done. If the President shall be satisfied, on full inquiry, in regard to any single item that it is unconstitutional, or not of public national importance, he can direct the Secretary of War to postpone the work until he can communicate the facts to Congress for further consideration."

In this connection Representative Horr, of Michigan, in his speech in Congress as a member of the Committee on Commerce which reported the bill, said:

"Now, there happens to be a notion, I do not know how it originated, that the money appropriated in the River and Harbor bill is thrown away. 'A great steal!' you will hear people say. Where? Who steals it? What river is there that is not being well improved? Where is there one that the work is not well done? Is there a man on this floor who knows of any of this work being done by the Government that is not done carefully, judiciously and economically? If there is, let him speak. In all my travels I have yet to see a single instance where the Government engineers are not carefully and laboriously expending the money of the people, so far as they can, on the improvement of these rivers and harbors. The Engineer Department is composed of the very ablest men in the Government service. There is always something to show for your money. It is not thrown away. Every harbor you improve shows the benefit for itself. Every stream that you clean out and prepare for commerce shows for itself how the money has been spent. There is not a dollar of this money that goes as perquisites to any man living. Probably 85 to 90 per cent. goes into muscle, into labor—is expended right in the country where it is raised. It does not impoverish a country to collect its revenues if the money collected is expended to improve the country that paid the taxes."

No one claims for this bill absolute perfection, but with its imperfections it contained too much of good to merit defeat.

It carries a larger sum than similar bills have heretofore done, and the reason is that Congress with the approval of the President and of the press and people of the country determined to improve the great Mississippi, in the valley of which live 22,000,000 of our people, whose lives and fortunes depend upon the policies of that great artery.

For the main trunk of that stream is appropriated $4,678,000, and for it and the tributaries the sum of $6,705,000. If you deduct this from the total $18,738,875 you will obtain an amount less than the expenditure of last year, which was $11,451,300.

The whole amount appropriated to new works is $1,363,476, all of recognized national character and utility, $50,000 of it being for the Passaic River and the same amount for Raritan Bay.

The rest of the sum appropriated, after deducting the Mississippi's main stream and the Potomac Flats fund, the surveys and the amount for new works is devoted to improvements already in progress, and to cease which would in most cases cause the loss of the previous expenditure upon them.

France spends $19,000,000 per annum on her harbors, England spent in one year $15,000,000 on her thirteen hundred miles of coast, while we have 22,000 miles of sea coast alone.

The question of extravagance is one of resources and object to be attained. We can afford, I take it, with [illegible] course of nearly forty thousand millions to expend eighteen millions, less than one twentieth of one per centum, in improving and cheapening the pathways.

I call your attention also to the fact that the Mississippi River appropriation, aside from its great general importance, goes to benefit and preserve from further devastation the starving homeless people—most of them our fellow democrats, whose lives were endangered and whose property was destroyed this very last Winter to an extent greater than the area of New Jersey by the floods of that river. You surely remember the large appropriations which we made in Congress for their relief and the hundreds of thousands of rations issued to them by the Secretary of War.

Why is it we hear only of this River and Harbor bill? There were, in my judgment, much more extravagant bills passed by the republican majority at the last session of Congress than this one.

Why all this hue and cry about $18,000,000, and silence all along the line about the remainder of $295,233,957? There were six bills towering like giants above this bill, and the effort seems to be to make it the cat for all of them. Here they are:

The Legislative	$ [illegible]
Sundry Civil,	[illegible]
Army,	[illegible]
Post Office,	[illegible]
Pensions,	[illegible]
Deficiency,	[illegible]

I tell you the grand kick at the River and Harbor bill, is because some of the money it carries goes into the South and into the Democratic regions of the country and into work and labor, instead of the coffers of monopolists, and the pockets of office-holders.

The great railroads opposed this bill because it cheapens freights, hurts their profits and keeps them within bounds. They do not want cheap transportation of our great crops and of the products of our giant industries.

They received from the liberal hand of America 200,000,000 acres of fertile public domain, and more than one hundred millions of guaranteed bonds. In fact, this people built their roads and gave them to their projectors, and now they shriek the loudest against the improvement of our natural water highways for the benefit of the masses of farmers, planters, artisans, and consumers of the nation.

The diminution of railroad freight one mill per ton per mile, says General Hoar, saves annually to this country $70,000,000, and the railroad managers are thoroughly aware of it.

The great city of New York also opposes the bill. A commercial empress, the terminus of the great trunk lines, she wishes to retain her power, her facilities for the accumulation of wealth, and looks with disfavor upon the extension of commercial facilities elsewhere. She gladly witnesses the expenditure of $3,180,000 in submarine mining at Hell Gate and the improvement of the Hudson River, but believes that after these are accomplished that it is time to cease the improvement of rivers and harbors.

My friends, it is the duty of every citizen to study the geography, the commercial history and statistics of his country, to grasp if he can its immensity of resources, its wonderful development, to read, reflect and decide for himself after acquiring a knowledge of the facts, and not to blindly permit his opinion to be made for him by the crafty clamor of the selfish too often re-echoed by those wholly ignorant of the matter.

Much has been said of the small appropriations in the River and Harbor bill. You should know how few these are: Of the 361 appropriations in the bill 187 are for $10,000 and under, while seventeen items get over $9,000,000. It is not the small items that have swollen the aggregate, and in order to attack them successfully you must take them up seriatim and overlook the report of the engineers and the testimony of the citizens of the localities to be improved. What had we as members of Congress to act upon other than the evidence laid before us by the Executive branch of the Government?

You have heard much of Cheesequakes creek. It has been joked about, howled about, and even embalmed in song—yet, here are the cold facts respecting it. I read from the Engineers report, Executive Document, No. 1. vol. II, page 665:

Statistics of Commerce for year ending June 30th, 1881.

Class.	No.	Tonnage	Draught.
Sloops	135	20 to [illegible] each	4 to 6 feet.
Schooners	30	40 to 100 each	4 to 7 feet.
Barges	135	100 to 200 each	5 to 7 feet.
Steam vessels	660	Not known....
	960

These vessels carry manure, gas-house lime, poudrette, &c., up the creek, and bring down fire and potter's clay, moulding sand, cord-wood, bricks, and iron ore.

Yet, my colleague, Mr. Ross, has been by one newspaper classed—fit only to be named with Wm. M. Tweed and Oscar Baldwin.

I remember the gallant stand he made for Tilden in the Forty-fourth Congress when he stood the sole representative from New Jersey, against the formation of the Electoral Commission, and against the accomplishment of its wicked decisions. I remember how we in this district applauded his course, and I do not believe one of you now thinks him a dishonest man, or aught else but a Democrat in faith and principles.

My friends, no member of Congress can control a dollar of the money appropriated by this. He cannot name one employee to be placed upon the works. No corrupt influences passed the bill. We did not purpose to accede to the President's desire for $20,000,000 in a lump to be spent where he pleased, but we thought it a dangerous power, one that could be used politically by favoring localities in exchange for votes, and I believed a Republican majority would have given it to him had we not passed the bill over his veto.

Some of the best men in Congress of both parties supported this bill—men of irreproachable character and long public service. Senators Bayard and Saulsbury influenced by their appeals to the Committee on Commerce the appropriations for the State of Delaware, though afterward they voted against the bill. It was so in many instances. The organ of the Democratic party, the Post, favored it and favors it still. Calhoun, Clay, Webster, Lincoln, Sumner, Greeley and Silas Wright have favored similar measures in the past, and, so far as my own course is concerned I challenge the world to show that my motive in voting for it was other than my desire to do what was right and what was best for our country.

There were 6,068 immigrants landed at Castle Garden last week.

Gen. Butler has been nominated for Governor by the Massachusetts Greenbackers.

It is not the farmers who are howling about the River and Harbor bill. It is the railroad organs.—Gloucester Tribune.

The Arkansas election will take place on September 4th. Judge James H. Berry, the Democratic candidate, will be the next Governor.

Every county in Alabama went Democratic. Didn't we hear something from the Republican press, a short time ago, about a break-up of the Democratic party in the South.

Returns from all the counties in Kentucky show the vote for Appellate Clerk to stand as follows: Henry, (Dem) 117,907; Jacobs, (Ind. and Rep.) 75,511. Henry's majority is 42,496.

All the Republican papers of the Fourth Congressional District were strongly opposed to the renomination by the Democratic Convention of Hon. Henry S. Harris. Why should they not be? They desire one of their own ilk in his place.

The primary cause of the death of Senator Hill was habitual cigar smoking. He had the bad habit of almost constantly holding a cigar between his lips, and it was the chafing of the nicotine end of the cigar against his tongue that produced the cancer. The lesson is obvious.

The old Warren county ring was shocked to the very centre of its moral nature by Mr. Harris's vote for the River and Harbor bill, and sought to prevent his nomination in consequence. The fact that Harris was actively instrumental in sending several of these ringsters to the State Prison, of course had no influence upon their action.—Exchange.

While it is being charged that the River and Harbor bill is a steal, and that the members of Congress who voted for it will profit thereby, those who make the charge know that a Congressman has no more to do with handling the money or directing the manner of its expenditure than the most obscure pedagogue in the country. The hue and cry against the bill is political [illegible].—Gloucester Tribune.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - - City Editor.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER IN UNION COUNTY.

OH, for an Opera House.

THE 'town-clock' goes once again, once more.

REV. Dr. A. S. Patton, of the Baptist Weekly, will preach in the Park Ave. Baptist Church, next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M.

BEFORE our next number is issued, the last month of Summer, and the first of the hay-fever season, will have passed away.

THE little scholars of Mrs. H. N. Spencer's school in North Plainfield, enjoyed a picnic at Wooden's Grove during yesterday afternoon.

WE were presented yesterday, by Denton, the Florist, with a magnificent bunch of blossoms from that beautiful shrub the Hardy Hydrangea.

Do not fail to remember that the Saengerbund will give a Grand Picnic in Wooden's Grove during the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Sept. 7th.

Is it not about time that the fair bills of the Union and Middlesex Counties' Association were posted about the county? They have been printed some time.

A NUMBER of members of the Clarkson family of this city and Rahway, had a reunion at Boynton Beach, recently, upon which occasion a most enjoyable time resulted.

THE many friends of the Children's Home will be glad to learn that the managers are progressing as rapidly as possible with the arrangements for the proposed new building.

BUCKS county farmers complain of a new disease that has broken out among the cows. It attacks the animal in the right eye, spreads to the other and it soon goes blind.

A NUMBER of carrier pigeons were released at the Plainfield station on Tuesday morning. After the usual circling of the skies, the birds instinctively started for their homes.

PARTIES desirous of securing a competent mechanic to do all kinds of jobbing in masonry should consult Mr. William C. Smith, whose advertisement appears in another part of this paper.

THE damages occasioned by the frightening of Mr. I. Ten Eyck's horse by a bicycle rider recently, have been paid by the check of the latter's father, and the matter thus amicably adjusted.

THE oil-cloth factory should hurry its efforts to overcome its odors. On Monday evening the residents in some parts of Fifth street and vicinity, had to close their doors and windows in order to breathe.

IT is said by somebody that the ripeness of a watermelon can be judged of when a small speck, scale or blister begins to appear on the rind. These enlarge as the fruit matures; and when a melon is fully ripe they thickly cover the surface.

THE Mount Olives took five cars full of themselves and friends to Ocean Grove, yesterday, where they undoubtedly secured a surfeit of pleasure in the surf at their feet. (The above was borrowed for the occasion and returned without approval.)

A SPECIAL meeting of the Crescent B. B. Association will be held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall on Monday, Aug. 28th, at 7:45 p. m. As business of importance will come before the meeting the attendance of all members is necessary to make the meeting a success.

THE property known as the "Dunellen Hotel," Wm. S. Dean, proprietor, at Dunellen, N. J., has passed into new ownership, Mr. A. DeCamp having exchanged it for Boonton property, with a Mr. Taylor of Montclair, N. J. Mr. Dean's lease does not expire until April 1st.

MR. J. B. MILLER the popular host, has been engaged in renovating Laing's Hotel throughout in preparation for the large number of Fall boarders that the season promises. The reputation of this Hotel increases as its comfortable accommodations and generous table becomes known.

OUR desk was loaded down on Wednesday morning, with three mammoth tomatoes which our colored friend Abe Freeman had raised on the farm of Wm. Stewart, at New Brooklyn. The specimens weighed exactly four pounds and were highly creditable to the ability of Abe as a first-class gardener.

IN our advertising columns appears the announcement of Messrs. Hopkins & Allen, who have taken the popular wine-rooms at the corner of Liberty and West streets. These gentlemen will continue the reputation the place has attained as a resort well managed, and stocked with first-class liquors and cigars.

BY direction of the State Superintendent of Instruction, the County Boards of Examiners will convene on Friday, Aug. 25th, and Saturday, the 26th, in their respective counties. Applicants for the first and second grade certificates will attend both days. Applicants for third grade will attend only on Friday (to-day).

OUR readers may pass without notice an advertisement elsewhere for active and energetic ladies and gentlemen as agents and collectors. The work for which they are wanted we can personally guarantee is of the highest order, and would recommend it to such as have time and inclination to accept employment of the kind.

THERE is one dog to about every fifteen inhabitants in North Plainfield. Something should be done to reduce that proportion.—Central Times.

Would our esteemed contemporary suggest that our neighbors over the brook be killed off? By the way, what has provoked the unusual spirit of belligerence that pervades the columns of the Times of yesterday.

THE Trenton Gazette displays its good judgment in gleaning Plainfield news from these columns. And the Central Times, which asserts that the industrious colored sexton who winds (?) the town-clock "is too honest to expect pay for doing nothing," is respectfully referred to the minutes of the Council meeting of July 3d, wherein is recorded the fact that the Com. on Salaries reported as correct the honest sexton's claim of $5 for "doing nothing."

OUR old friend Mr. J. N. Jenkins is moving a block of four houses in Trenton to allow the Bound Brook Railroad to straighten their tracks near the station. The families, containing 19 persons, refuse to move out, although the Company paid them $100 each to do so. They say they believe in Jenkin's way of doing work and one family have even taken a boarder while the buildings are being removed. Jenkins says that's most too much faith for the money.

A NUMBER of distinguished guests visited Washington Rock last Sunday, and partook of an out-door lunch, catered by Delmonico. The party consisted of Prof. Thomas A. Edison and wife, Miss Dottie Edison, Miss Edna Bradley, Miss Jennie Stillwell, Mrs. Dingy, Mr. Samuel Insull, of Menlo Park, Charles L. Clarke, of New York, Prof. Colombo, of Milan, Italy and J. F. Bailey of Paris, France. The party were loud in their praises of the beautiful view afforded from this historic spot.

Church Services at Netherwood.

Rev. D. C. Potter of the Sixth street Baptist Church of New York and of the editorial staff of the Examiner, will preach next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, in the Netherwood Union Chapel. Mr. Potter will doubtless draw a number of our citizens, as he has many friends in Plainfield.

At St. Mary's Church.

Over two hundred were present at the confirmation services by Bishop Wigger, in St. Mary's Church, during Sunday morning of last week. The Bishop delivered a most instructive address, to the children, in relation to the grace received by the sacrament and the duty of carrying out the practical work of their salvation during future life. In the evening the Reverend Father gave an excellent lecture, which was largely attended, on "The Duties of the Catholic Life."

Another Set-back.

It is with regret we learn of an unfortunate accident happening to ex-City Judge Suydam, who was convalescing nicely from his severe illness. In company with a friend, he was riding in an open wagon across a field near his father's residence, at Millstone, last Thursday, enjoying plover shooting. A shot from the gun of one of the party startled the horse, who by a sudden spring threw Mr. Suydam out of the wagon, dislocating his shoulder blade.

The Coming Fair.

Everything seems to point to the fact that the approaching Fair of the Union & Middlesex Counties' Association, on Sept. 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th, on their grounds near this city, will be a grand success. The various committees are exerting themselves to make it so. It is to be hoped that farmers and others in two adjoining counties will not be behind in their exhibits. There is no reason why, with such farming districts as Union and Middlesex represents, the exhibit of agricultural products should not excel all other county fairs. Make your exhibits, gentlemen.

North Plainfield Assessment.

The duplicate of Assessor Booher for 1882, shows the value of real estate in North Plainfield to be $1,204,329. Personal property, $202,000. The amount of debts deducted was $102,500. The above assessment shows an increase in the value of real estate over last year of $12,450. The number of poll taxes was 675, making, with 50 soldiers exempt, a total of voters 725. Dogs taxed, 117.

New York Telephone Connection.

The General Inspector of the N. Y. & N. J. Telephone Company and Manager Obl of this city, drove along the line on Saturday last, having in view an effort to connect Plainfield subscribers with New York as speedily as possible. The difficulty was found to be a short span of the trunk line that yet remains to be built. Arrangements were effected by means of which it is hoped that complete connection will be achieved in a few days, and the long promised convenience of talking over the wire with subscribers in other places, consummated.

Five—and all Boys.

On Thursday of last week the census of this city and North Plainfield was increased by the birth of three boys, the mothers of which are doing exceedingly well and are in receipt of many congratulations upon the beauty of the young bebe, besides being vastly envied by less fortunate, married friends. During Monday night last another son was born, of whom better things are hoped than the adoption of his father's profession, while the news reaches us of a Plainfield lady, visiting in Brooklyn, who has just become the mother of another son, her sixteenth child.

A New Church Building.

The parishioners of Father O'Hanlon's R. C. Church of North Plainfield have been so successful in their organization, that the erection of a comfortable and convenient house of worship is to be commenced in the near future. Lots for the purpose have been purchased on Manning avenue at the head of Warren street, on one of which is a house that with some alterations will be used as a parsonage. The corner-stone of the proposed church will probably be laid with appropriate ceremonies on Sunday, September 24th; upon which date, if arrangements with the railroad can be made, an excursion from other places to this city, will take place.

School Openings.

Mrs. Austin's Craig Place school will open on Monday, Sept. 4th.

Mr. Leal's private school for boys, on Front street opposite the residence of Dr. Chase, will open Wednesday, Sept. 13th.

The Friend's Select School on Front street—which during the coming term will be for girls only—will open on Monday, Sept. 18th.

Messrs. Lyon & Lewinsky's boarding and day school for boys and young men, will open on Monday, Sept. 4th. The principals of this academy have issued a very complete circular of information regarding the studies and government of the institution, which may be obtained upon request.

A Horrid Shame.

Nothing but fashion could ever induce anyone to adopt those little two-wheeled yellow carts which the "veritable dudes" now use. The Brooklyn Union Argus says: "It cannot be said that they ride in them or that the aforesaid traps are vehicles. You might as well call a wheelbarrow a vehicle. It is a little box hung low between the wheels. The horse's hindquarters tower above the dash-board and the unfortunate occupant of the vehicle is kept perpetually dodging the fell strokes of the beast's blithesome tail. Every step of the horse hoists and dips the box fore and aft like a small boat in a chopping sea. And though intensely swell and all that sort of thing, you know, it is about as comfortable and graceful as a lame parrot walking over ploughed ground."

Caved.

The new fire-well at Ninth street and Crescent avenue, that was being built by David Martin under direction of the Committee on Wells of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department, had almost been completed, when an accident happened on Wednesday of last week that most emphatically put a stop to its further progress. Five feet of water had been gained and the workmen were being congratulated by the Committee at the prospect of finishing by Saturday, when the sides caved in and all their labor of the past was of no account. No reason for the accident was apparent, and so suddenly did it happen that the two men in the well escaped most miraculously. One jumped and seized a hanging rope as high up as possible, while the other grasped the first by the leg. The lower workman was buried above the knees and all their tools were lost. Another well is being sunken a few feet from the old one.

The New Public School Building of North Plainfield.

The Board of Trustees of North Plainfield School District, No. 36, having adopted plans for the new public school building as drawn up by an Elizabeth architect, will commence its erection at once. On Tuesday bids were received for the building of its foundation and the contract awarded to Geo. Stewart, who has already commenced work. The building is to be two stories in height above the court beneath, and built of brick. Its dimensions will be about 60 feet in depth by 56 feet in width, which latter measurement includes a wing on each side of the main building, some ways back from the front. There will be six class rooms on each floor, about 20 by 30 feet in dimensions. These rooms in the main building on the upper floor, will be so separated that they may be all thrown into one large room whenever desired. Beneath the whole building will be a court with its floor three feet below the ground and its ceiling eight feet high. This will be entirely surrounded by windows, making a fine open-air play room for use in rainy weather, or can be warmed for winter recesses.

The Class of Chautauqua.

The closing exercises of the ninth annual Chautauqua Assembly were held in the Amphitheatre at that place on Monday, in the presence of the largest audience ever gathered on a similar occasion—about 5,000 persons being present. After very interesting introductory exercises a short opening speech was made by Rev. Frank Russell, of Mansfield, Ohio. Mr. Russell's remarks were followed by short addresses from Prof. Frank Beard, of Syracuse University, and Lewis Miller, of Akron, Ohio, President of Chautauqua, who was honored with a Chautauqua salute (the waving of 5,000 handkerchiefs) and who compared Chautauqua to a growing tree, and gave this motto: "Ever try to excel, not others, but yourself." Prof. W. F. Sherwin, of Cincinnati; Duncan S. Miller, of London, England, and Gen. Solly Lewis, of Cincinnati; Dr. John H. Vincent, of New Haven, Superintendent of Chautauqua, made the closing address, announcing that the tenth Assembly would open on Tuesday evening, Aug. 7, 1883, and bidding farewell to Chautauqua and the Chautauquans. President Lewis Miller, at the close, paid a glowing tribute to Dr. Vincent, and called for a Chautauqua salute in his honor, which was given with a will, and, after music, the services closed.

The New Grammar School Building.

On Monday evening at a meeting of the Board of Education, a decision regarding the new school building on Fourth street was arrived at by the approval of one of the plans submitted by Architect Oscar S. Teale in competition with those of Messrs. Chas. H. Smith and E. R. Davis. The drawings of all were examined thoroughly by the Board, which devoted an evening to each of the architects that they might explain the advantages of their plans separately and without conflicting one with another. After each fair and equal privilege allowed, the Board met together and with careful deliberation settled upon the plans of Mr. Teale as being the most desirable in every particular. The plan provides for a handsome three-story building entirely of brick and with brick partitions. It will be much wider than deep, one side being flush with the sidewalk line on Union street and the other near the edge of the lot. This will give a frontage of ninety feet; and as the building will be placed further forward than the old one, a fine large play-ground in the rear will be secured. The lower two stories will be divided into eight class-rooms, each thirty by twenty feet in dimensions, which will be commodious, comfortable and ventilated by the most approved means. The top story will contain a small room to be used as a museum or library, and the rest of the entire floor will be thrown into a large assembly room for opening exercises in the morning and other occasions of use by the school.

Whether to heat the building by steam or hot-air is not yet decided, and the cost of the entire construction and furnishing will not be known until estimates have been made. One thing we can be assured of, that the present Board which has shown such consideration for the needs of the public by approving of plans for a building so complete and desirable, will not, in its erection, sacrifice its utility for the sake of ill-judged economy.

In Plainfield Also.

According to the Lambertville Record, there are a good many rowdies in that city who need considerable stern Jersey justice dealt out to them before they will learn to respect the laws of the land. A favorite exercise of their plug-ugly propensities is to interfere with the officers when they are endeavoring to arrest one of their pals. Several of the toughs have been fined for this offence, but that punishment does not seem to break up the practice. Our city has witnessed like occurrences, and the County jail is the only place to cool the ardor of the loafers.

For Mauch Chunk.

On Thursday of next week, the 31st inst., an excursion train will leave the Plainfield station at 7:34 a. m., for Mauch Chunk, Glen Onoko and the famous Switch Back by way of the C. R. R. of N. J. The fare will be $1.50 for the trip, and the excursion is gotten up to be the event of the season. We can heartily recommend the affair as being ably managed, and no more favorable an opportunity has ever been offered for families to visit these attractive regions. Returning, the train will leave Mauch Chunk at 4:30 o'clock p. m. Tickets can be purchased at the station on August 29th, 30th and 31st.

Aid for a Worthy Work.

We have repeatedly appealed in these columns, to the public, for its assistance financially in the work of the Muhlenberg Hospital. That institution has now nine patients in its wards which are being treated gratuitously, and the good it has been continually doing since opening is so well known that it seems incredible so little aid has come from the people. Much is being contributed by means of church collections every Sunday to causes less worthy, and that so apparent a need should exist in our midst is hardly creditable to the many christian organizations of this city. Let a day be set apart in every church, the collections of which shall be devoted to this home-work for the suffering, and let each individual contribute according to his means.

The Last Excursion

Of the season is that of the Sunday Schools of Crescent avenue Presbyterian Church and Warren Mission, to Long Branch and Ocean Grove, on Tuesday of next week. As is the custom this promises to be the largest, most pleasurable and successful of its kind—the well-known efforts of its managers having always resulted in the enjoyment of everybody. The train is advertised to leave this city at 7:30 a. m., returning from Ocean Grove at 5 o'clock, p. m., stopping at Long Branch each way. Tickets may be obtained at the stores of H. P. Reynolds, R. M. Stelle, P. Swain, S. H. Whitney, Bowers & Co., M. Reill, Parsons & Co., and J. H. Honeyman & Co., or at the station on the morning of the excursion.

Literary Notes.

The North American Review for September has for its leading article a very forcible presentment, by Dorman B. Eaton, of the evils produced by the practice of levying "Political Assessments." The paper is noteworthy for its striking array of facts, but more so because it will be universally regarded as the ultimatum of a large and influential section of the Republican party, addressed to the party leaders. "Architecture in America," by Clarence Cook, is marked by a freedom of utterance that is refreshing. In this respect it deserves to rank with Commander Gorringe's celebrated paper on the U. S. Navy. Augustus G. Cobb writes of "Earth-Burial and Cremation," and J. F. Manning has an article entitled "The Geneva Award and the Ship-Owners."

Base Ball.

At Hoboken on Saturday afternoon of last week, the Crescent Base Ball Club of this city played a return game with the Standard Oil Co.'s nine of New York, which resulted in a victory for the latter team in eight innings. A previous game played in this city on July 8th, was won by the Plainfielders with a score of 19 to 2 and an inning to spare, in consequence of which the defeat of Saturday was quite unexpected and attributed to many causes. Below is the score by innings:

STANDARD ....[illegible]

CRESCENT ....[illegible]

During to-morrow afternoon the Crescents will play a second game with the Potter nine of this city, upon which occasion Walters, the Crescent Association's new pitcher, and McQuade its new catcher, will compose a battery that the mackinists will have hard work to overcome. A very interesting game is promised, as both teams will struggle bravely to secure the championship of Plainfield.

High Times at the Highlands.

On Tuesday morning, despite lowering clouds and slight showers, ten cars comfortably filled left the Plainfield station for the Highlands of the Navesink, under the combined direction of the Trinity Reformed and 1st Presbyterian churches. The excursion was a most enjoyable one throughout, by reason of its destination being amid new and pleasant scenes and its management being in the hands of gentlemen so untiring in their efforts to insure the comfort and gratification of all. With the exception of a slight delay in the journey to and from, on account of hot-boxes, not an unsatisfactory feature occurred during the entire day. Bathing in the ocean, boating on the river, strolling through the woods, visiting the lamps that cost $80,000 each, and other chosen pleasures were indulged in to the heart's content, and the excursionists returned safely to Plainfield at about 8:30 p. m., with hands full of cat-tails for interior decoration and lunch-emptied baskets full of black bass for interior satisfaction.

Opening of the Westfield Public School.

The Westfield Public School will commence its regular sessions on Monday, Sept. 4th, 1882. The school building has been thoroughly cleaned and no pains have been spared by the Trustees in placing everything in proper working order. The following corps of teachers has been engaged for the ensuing year:

W. HENRY BAXTER, Principal.
Miss LIZZIE STEVENS, B. Class.
" LILLIE SCHLAET, C. Class, Grammar Dep't.
" SARAH I. SPICER, A. Class, Primary "
" MARY E MOORE, B " " "
" EMMA JOHNSON, C " " "

In the latter lady, the Trustees have secured a teacher of experience and tact in the training of little folks; and under her care the infant classes will be ably managed during the coming term.

From the present out-look and with teaching talent represented, the year bids fair to be a prosperous one. Parents are particularly invited to be present on the morning of the opening, and as often thereafter as they may find it convenient to do so. It is very essential to the advancement of the children that they be present on the first day of school.

Opening of Our Public Schools.

The Plainfield Public Schools will open as usual on Monday morning, Sept. 4th. The High and Primary departments will, of course, assemble in their own buildings but the classes of the Grammar School—"owing to circumstances over which they have no control"—will be taught elsewhere than has been customary, until the new building for their occupancy is erected. Assembly Hall in the High School building, is being divided by partitions into four class-rooms and other scholars will be taught in the old post-office on Front street. If there should not be room enough secured by these means, some division in attendance will probably be made whereby a portion of the Grammar School will be accommodated during the morning hours, and the rest in the afternoon. City Physician Lowrie, Secretary of the Board of Health, will make a thorough examination of the sanitary condition of the building on Front street, and any improvement he may think necessary for the general good, will be effected by the owner.

There will be no change in the corps of teachers—all having in the past term giving such entire satisfaction, that the Board is glad to be able to retain their services.

An Excursion and Its Accidents.

On Thursday of last week, the members of No. 2 Engine and Hose Co's and their friends spent a pleasant day at Neshaminy Falls Grove, which excursion, managed with a careful eye for the profits as well as for the enjoyment of those who attended, resulted most successfully in every way. Although the day was a perfect one as to weather, the trip was speedy, the dance music satisfactory and the attractions varied and enjoyable, a trio of accidents occurred that was through no fault of the committee of arrangements. One member of the company fell from a swing, and although now on the road to recovery is still obliged to walk with the assistance of a cane. A young lady who had eaten rather heartily and after two or three rapid dances drank too freely of ice-water, was taken with spasms in consequence and became seriously ill. The most lamentable accident was that which happened to a domestic in the employ of a Netherwood family. Just before starting for home she fell and broke her knee-pan, and is now being treated at the Muhlenberg Hospital. Being an unusually heavy person the fracture was very severe, and although in a few weeks ability to walk again will be assured, the bone can never be brought together so as to knit and the victim will always be slightly lame.

The State Agricultural Society.

At Waverly, this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, the Directors of the New Jersey Agricultural Society will tender the press an informal reception. The objects expressed in the invitation are: To explain some of the work of the society, to partake of a collation, and to enjoy a social re-union.

Notice!

The active and exempt members of Gazelle Engine Co. No. 1, are hereby requested to meet at the parlors of the engine house on Wednesday evening, Aug. 30th, at 8 o'clock, to consider what action shall be taken regarding the old hand-engine that has been given the company by the Fire Department.

A Grand Reunion.

A reunion of the many descendants of James and Nancy Denison Tappan, which includes our worthy fellow-citizen, ex-Judge Peter P. Good, was held at Home Bluff, Fountain County, Indiana, 9th of present month, and pronounced to be one of the most interesting events of the kind that ever occurred.

From a detailed report of the pleasant affair in the Cincinnati Gazette, we extract as follows:

"Judge Peter P. Good, of New Jersey, who has prepared a lengthy history of the family, occupied an hour's time in delivering his oration on 'The Formation of National Character by Hereditary Influences.' The address was a masterly effort in the line of argument, and was listened to with the greatest of interest throughout."

We hope when our friend the Judge returns home, to receive from his pen a particular review of the memorable event.

Funeral Obsequies.

On Tuesday afternoon a large number of the young residents of Arlington avenue and its vicinity gathered together upon the occasion of the interment of Mr. Jacob Mumford, who so suddenly departed this life the night before. The deceased had resided in the neighborhood for the past nine years, and was greatly admired by friends for his faithful disposition and respected by strangers for his strength of character. The ceremonies of burial were exceedingly impressive, and the floral tributes spread and planted upon the grave were tokens of the kind remembrance of many. The deceased leaves a son to mourn his loss, who was present upon the occasion clad in the sombre habiliments of woe—the affecting scene, when the son stood with bowed head in seeming prayer over the grave of his father, was heart-rending, and not a dry eye could have been found among the witnesses.

Poor dog!

"When Doctors Disagree—"

There has long been a lack of harmony among the physicians connected with the Muhlenberg Hospital, and such has recently culminated in a decided action on the part of a majority of the medical and surgical staff. As the Hospital is now managed the physician-in-chief has entire control and direction of the treatment of cases and the performing of operations. What he says is law, so far as the Hospital's patients are concerned, and his decision is final even should the entire staff think differently.

A few weeks ago, Dr. Field in his judgment considered it necessary, in order to prolong a patient's life, to perform a certain operation. In this view he was sustained by the similar opinions of five of his associates. Dr. Hart said it should not be done as it would kill the patient, and such ruling, under the existing regulations, was decisive. In consequence the patient was not operated upon and, according to the diagnosis of six able and experienced doctors, will die before she need because one surgeon's opinion is better than half-a-dozen—in the Muhlenberg Hospital.

As the above circumstance was but a specimen of other difficulties of the sort that might arise, the six referred to met together and passed certain resolutions covering the ground of their grievance, and drew up a proposition to the effect that each member of the staff should be placed on an equal footing and clothed with equal authority regarding their own cases. This was forwarded to the Board of Governors which eventually declined to accede to any so just a demand. The six then sent in their resignations, to take effect Aug. 15th, as members of the medical and surgical staff of the Muhlenberg Hospital. These resignations were signed by Dr's Chauncey M. Field, Monroe B. Long, T. H. Tomlinson, J. B. Probasco, W. G. Boone and G. W. Endicott.

Such decisive action, and its apparent effect upon the existence of the Hospital in the future, opened the eyes of the Board to the fact that possibly further consideration of the proposition might be judicious. It thereupon requested that the resignations be withdrawn until the next meeting of the Board, in order that the attendance of all Summer absentees might be secured. The six who only asked for fair treatment, were, of course, ready to treat fairly. The request of the Board was agreed to, and until its meeting in October matters remain, to a certain extent, as they were.

The Happy Knights Pass a Happy Day.

The first annual excursion of Perseverance Lodge No. 74, K. of P., of this city, took place last Monday. Long Branch, Asbury Park and Ocean Grove being the objective points. At a few minutes past 8 a. m., a train consisting of eight comfortably filled cars, left Plainfield and after a very pleasant run of two hours' an invasion of the most popular sea-side resort for respectable law-abiding people on the North American Atlantic Coast, took place. After a general inspection of the various points and places of interest had been concluded, including the most prominent one just now—the camp meeting—an attack was made on sundry lunch baskets and restaurants and an enormous quantity of victuals disappeared with a marvelous rapidity—the appetites of the attacking party being whetted by the sea breeze. The boats on Wesley Lake and the bathing houses were liberally patronized, and a number had their "pictures took." One of the Knights on going into the water was observed wearing his bathing suit backward, i. e., had it on wrong side foremost, he was of course regarded by the "knowing ones" as a "countryman from the rooral district." Many old Plainfielders who are rusticating at this place were met with and many good old "chats" was the consequence. The great want of the twin cities at present seems to be the want of boarders, as "boarding by the week, day or meal" seemed to be tacked on to the front of 75 per cent. of all the houses there, although every house and tent on the grounds are occupied. This is the most successful season in its history and building and improvements will be the order of the day as soon as the season closes. For quietness, sobriety, order good conduct, this place—or these places—stands to-day unrivalled in this country, and are destined to be "the family seaside resort of America." The only disturbing element, if such it may be called, just now are occasional incursions of pick-pockets, but only for them the few police there would have absolutely nothing to do—but draw their pay. At 6:25 p. m., the dignified and manly form of Colonel Morrell was seen at the depot gesticulating with a white handkerchief, and then his deafening military voice yelled out "all-a-board for Plainfield." All obeyed and arrived home about 8 o'clock perfectly satisfied with the days enjoyment.

They Say

That the proposed concert by the very talented combination of artists under the management of Mr. Edward Clayburgh, that was to be given in the Park avenue Church during the Fall, has been indefinitely postponed.

That many residents in the vicinity who are objecting to a new school-house at Franklin Square, have families of children which make more noise than the scholars would, and keep it up all the afternoon and evening.

That a school-house is not so annoying as are the early morning church bells that disturb the slumbers of—alas—too many.

That a young delegate from North Plainfield to the Fourth Congressional District Democratic Convention, at Newton, was taken for the Hon. Henry S. Harris several times, and much complimented thereby.

That the spread of typhoid fever in Netherwood has somewhat abated.

That the Crescent avenue excursion next Tuesday, will leave for home earlier than others "on account of the children."

That the Crescent avenue children would stay an hour later as well as other children, and the extra hour would be very acceptable to the excursionists.

That "our sister church in the affliction" is not to have a new organ, but the old one rebuilt.

That the dog-days end, school commences, and oysters in every form appear, a week from Monday next.

That one of the colored well-diggers turned so pale when the well caved in last week, that Commissioner Gillies recommended he should stay away from home for a day or two as his wife would not recognize him.

Major Eugene F. Gross has the sympathy of a large circle of friends, in the loss by death of his aged father, notice of which will be found under its proper heading in this issue.

FIRE MATTERS.

At about 9:30 o'clock of Monday evening, the ringing of the alarm bell called out the entire Fire Department to attend the burning of a brush heap on Westervelt avenue at the foot of Water street. No occasion for the services of the firemen was apparent; but at the request of residents in the vicinity, who feared the flying sparks, No. 2 engine played on the fire for a few minutes, until it was past doing damage.

WESTFIELD WHIFFS.

Eh. Hart, Jr., and family are spending the week at Asbury Park.

Capt. Ransom arrived home from his ocean voyage on Tuesday, looking well and hearty.

A. K. Gale, one of our popular clerks at Gale's drug store, started on Monday morning last on his vacation. He intends spending it at the Thousand Islands.

Two of our residents went to Hunterdon county on Saturday last to purchase pigs. They arrived home on Monday evening with one calf. They say that they will try it again this Fall.

The new house of Albert W. Moffett in Clark township is rapidly approaching completion. We understand he intends making a Road House out of it for the accommodation of the traveling public, there being none in that township.

The last of a series of games of base ball between the Westfield Association and the Lynwood club of Roselle, was played at Roselle on Saturday last. The Westfielders came off victorious with a score of 8 to 4. Nine innings were played. (Time two hours.)

An excursion to Long Branch and Ocean Grove by the Westfield Hook and Ladder Company will come off on Wednesday, Aug. 30th inst. This will probably be the last excursion this year from our town to the seashore. Tickets, $1. Everbody ought to go.

On Wednesday morning R. Roberts, our vegetable dealer, having over-loaded his wagon with peaches and melons, one of the hind wheels of his wagon broke down in front of the Turf Exchange, upsetting his load into the street, destroying a portion of the load of melons, etc.

The cake walk held by the Lodge of Good Samaritans on Thursday evening last, was a success financially. The successful contestants for the cake for best style in walking was Theodore Williams of Westfield, and his lady friend from Newark. Wm. J. Bogert and Edward Leveridge were the judges.

It is with sadness that we have to record the death of Mrs. Mary L. Trimmer, wife of Geo. Trimmer, residing corner Broad and Elm streets. Her decease occurred Tuesday morning last after an illness of about two weeks. She leaves an infant daughter two weeks old. Mrs. T. was a consistent member of the Baptist Church. Her burial took place on Thursday afternoon, at 2 p. m., from the church. Rev. E. H. Bronson, present pastor, assisted by Rev. Joseph Greaves, the former pastor, officiated. The husband and relatives have the heartfelt sympathy of all the residents of our town.

Real estate seems to have taken quite a boom within the past week. There has been several sales of the same. The Burnsmith estate, ten acres on the Springfield road, to J. Coleman; a lot 200x200 on the Prospect road, by Robt. French to Clark Perrine; a lot on North avenue, by the Scudder estate to Mrs. C. Johnson, and a tract of about 13 acres on Hillside and Park avenues by A. Beck to Wm. G. Peckham. The last tract is a fine piece of land admirably located for building purposes and is capable of being made at a small expense as fine building sites as can be found anywhere around our town. Give us good roads and real estate will advance in price and plenty of buyers will be on hand to purchase.

CLIPPINGS.

Elegant peaches have at last reached the market.

The public schools and oysters will open in about a week.

Politicians should not get excited. It is three months yet to election time.

Mr. Thomas Hoagland, an old Democratic farmer of Hunterdon county, is raising blackberries nearly as large as guinea eggs.

Henry S. Trimmer, of Quakertown, is the senior justice of the peace in Hunterdon county. His present term will complete forty years of service in that office.

The light blue suits which in the early part of the season were worn by young men have not multiplied very rapidly. The fashion didn't take. The fact is, the ladies are better than the male sex in spreading the fashions. Who cares for what a man wears!

The Cranbury News says: Mr. John Van Derveer has a quantity of whiskey which was stilled in Cranbury over a hundred years ago, a wine glass taken from the Hessians during the Revolution, and an arm chair which is nearly two hundred years old.

The Bakers' Association of Paterson, had a grand picnic, preceded by a parade, on Wednesday of last week. A large tin cannon had been fixed in a wagon, which was followed by hundreds of the gamins of the city. The cannon was discharged into the crowd every few moments, being loaded with choice assortments of cakes, rolls and crackers. The cannon was directed to the sidewalk, so that the contents struck the crowd squarely. The result was a great deal of sport among the children, who seemed to have wonderfully capacious pockets and stomachs.

The Central railroad of New Jersey has been in arrears of taxes upon the real estate of the company in Newark subject to municipal tax since 1874. The company has never been pressed for payment, and no proceedings were ever taken against the property, which is valued at about $600,000. Recently President Little of the Central road made a proposition to the authorities of Newark, offering to pay the original amount of taxes on the property, since the year 1874, if the penalties, amounting to about 12 per cent. per annum, were remitted. This was agreed to, and President Little sent his check to the city for nearly $80,000, the full amount of the taxes due.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

FOR THE LADIES.

Mahogany is the newest shade of red.

Watered and shaded ribbons will again be worn.

Marlborough is a new and delicate shade of copper red.

The favorite point for the corsage bow is the top of the left shoulder.

Colored handkerchiefs are studies of color in combinations and designs.

Laces of all kinds are in fashion. Even the old black Chantilly is revived.

The longer the beak of the bird the more is it sought for as a hat ornament.

French shoe polish lightly brushed over a rusty chip hat makes it look new.

The new cloaking plushes imitate seal, beaver and otter furs to perfection.

All the medieval and renaissance points are revived in the modern imitation laces.

The jackets and ulsterettes for early Fall wear are longer than those of last season.

Plush sacques and dolmans will, in a great measure, take the place of sealskin next Winter.

Smalt and silver blue will be combined in new Fall suits with terra cotta and mahogany shades.

The new English alpacas come in gray shades and black, with softer finish than the old time goods.

Children at the Summer resorts look like fairies floating around in their airy white and tinted draperies.

Obovate satin buttons of medium size in all shades to match the new goods, appear among new trimmings.

Ottoman repe in silk and wool, figured and striped with velvet and plush, appear among new Fall dress goods.

The latest caprice in handkerchiefs is for narrow borders in combinations of æsthetic colors on white centres.

Ottoman repped and satin-backed velvet ribbons form the bulk of the importations in this line of goods up to this date.

The golden Hamburg cock's back is most in demand for hat trimming, as it shows natural shaded effects in mahogany tints.

The new plushes come in all lengths of pile, from the short moleskin plush to the long napped silk and mohair goods that resemble the heavier furs.

The first cheviots for Fall wear are of light texture in shepherd's checks of heather mixtures, to be combined with cheviots that come with them in inch square plaids in the same colors and mixtures.

Some of the new satins are brocaded in lace effects in black and white on grounds of color embracing all the new æsthetic and fashionable shades. These will be trimmed with white and black laces matching the design of the brocaded lace effects.

The earliest Fall suits will be of cheviot, flannel and Gilbert cloths of light texture, in shades of humus and silver blue, drab, terra cotta, Marlborough red, mahogany, brown and neutral shades, and will be made dressy with buttons, buckles and fancy ornaments of cut steel.

A MYSTERY OF THE SEA.

[illegible] solved, and its solution [illegible] discloses, in all probability, a [illegible] crime. In the Fall of 1867 [illegible] Explorer sailed from Goderich on Lake Huron for Georgian Bay with a stock of goods to trade among the Indians. Late in November of the same year John Waddel, who owned and sailed her, returned to Port Huron and told a pitiful tale of disaster. He said that the schooner had been struck by a squall and knocked on her beam ends, so that the cargo shifted. The two sailors went into the hold against his wishes for the purpose of rolling some barrels to windward, and thus righting her, and while they were thus engaged another sudden gust sank the vessel, and the men were drowned, the owner alone escaping.

The following Spring Waddel, having collected his insurance of $4,000, removed to Goderich. It was noticed that he made frequent trips with his little boy in an open boat to the North Shore, and, in 1870, on one of these voyages the boat capsized, and father and son were drowned. These suspicious trips were remembered, and when, five or six years ago, a fisherman discovered a sunken schooner in deep water off Cape Hurd she was forthwith supposed to be the Explorer. But Waddel was dead and no steps were taken to establish her identity until a few weeks ago. Since then Captain H. N. Jex, of Port Huron, has raised the sunken schooner, which, sure enough, proves to be the lost Explorer.

She had been stripped of her canvass, her cargo taken out, about fifteen tons of stone placed on board, and a dozen inch-and-a-half augur-holes bored in her center-board box close down to the keel. The doors of the cabin were found to be securely locked, and the body of one of the sailors, covered with moss, was found in the cabin, a skylight of which had been broken in some way. It is thought the other body floated out. It is reasonable to suppose that Waddel, after getting the sailors to help him to secrete the cargo, canvass, etc., was then afraid to trust them with the secret; that by the aid of whisky or drugs he succeeded in locking them in the cabin, and then let in the water.

CHARLES LAMB AND THE CHEESE.

The late Charles Mathews used to tell, with a great glee, a little story of Charles Lamb, which he vouched for as authentic, and believed to be unpublished. I am indebted for it to Mr. Henry S. Leigh, (the poet of Cockayne) who had it from the lips of his friend, the famous actor. One evening Mary Lamb took a sudden and violent fancy to have some Stilton cheese for supper, an article of which they had not a scrap in the house. It was very wet, and getting rather late; but Charles, with that self-denial which showed itself in a life-long devotion to his sister, at once volunteered to try whether any could be got. He sallied forth, and reached their cheesemonger just as the shutters were being put up.

In reply to his demand, he was assured that they had fine ripe Stilton; and the shop-keeper proceeded to cut off a slice. As it lay on the scales Lamb's attention was forcibly arrested by the lively gambols of a number of maggots which came to the surface of the "ripe fine Stilton." "Now, Mr. Lamb," said the cheese-monger, "shall I have the pleasure of sending this home for you?" "No, th-th-thank you," said Charles. "If you will give me a bit of twine I con-con-could, p'rhaps, l-l-l-lead it home!" The manner in which Charles Mathews rendered Lamb's stutter was, says Mr. Leigh, inimitable.

A RIP VAN WINKLE.

Nothing is more curious in physiology or psychology, than the entire suspension of all sense of activity and lapse of time which certain brain injuries make. Cured after an interval, perhaps of years, the injured person takes up life or his own living world—just where he dropped it at the moment of the blow. Without knowing it he has "jumped" a long parenthesis. The meantime has been a Rip Van Winkle sleep to him.

Fourteen years ago, when Chester A. Arthur was a struggling local politician in New York, of what is known there as the Custom House ring, he numbered among his friends the mate of a vessel, named Kennedy.

Just about that time Arthur made an unsuccessful effort to obtain some minor municipal appointment. The mate condoled with his political friend upon his disappointment, and soon after sailed for Washington with a cargo of hardware. While ascending the Potomac a block and tackle fell upon the mate's head, indenting his skull in such a manner that the man became practically an idiot, and was placed in the District of Columbia Insane Asylum.

A short time ago the famous surgeon Dr. Gross, of Philadelphia, visited the asylum, examined the case and straightway performed an operation invented by himself, which resulted in the almost immediate return of the patient's reason, the intervening fourteen years being, of course, a complete blank.

A day or two after his recovery, the mate walked out and began strolling through the Capitol Building. Almost the first person he encountered was President Arthur, who was just leaving the Executive chamber in the Senate wing.

"Why, how are you, Kennedy?" said the first citizen, affably extending his hand. "Glad to see you."

"Howdy, old man?" said the sailor. "How's things? Got a job yet?"

"Well, I believe I have," said the Executive, with a smile. "A pretty big job, too. You must come up to the White House and see me."

"To the White House?" repeated the amazed mariner.

"Yes, just ask for my private secretary, and he'll show you right in," and the President walked on.

"Poor old Chet!—clean gone, clean gone," mused the mate. "Actually believes himself to be President of the United States. Smart man once, too. That just shows you, gentlemen," he continued, turning to the bystanders, "that just shows you what politics and disappointment will bring a man to. Poor old Chet!"—San Francisco Post.

DOWN GO THE PRICES!

The people have treated me generously for many years and I am satisfied even though I do sacrifice my profits one month.

IN A NUTSHELL, THIS IS IT!

The practical point of all this is a radical reduction—prices from August first. [illegible]

JEFFERSONIAN.

Republican journals now and then rather sarcastically ask—"What are Jeffersonian principles?" Although we have frequently declared their meaning through these columns, it affords us pleasure to do so again.

They are—

[illegible] to the working of the Constitution, [illegible] at all times and under all circumstances.

Integrity and purity of character and personal ability the requisites for official position of every grade, great or minor, executive or legislative.

Encouragement of every legitimate business enterprise, industry and business, based upon strict equity and animated by prudent liberality.

No plundering monopolies or tribute receivers of any kind.

No squandering of the public funds or public domain.

No sinecure office-holders—drawing pay without service performed.

Gold and silver the legal-tender of the Constitution, and a currency redeemable on demand thereon.

Taxation for the general good of the people, the maintenance of plighted faith, and the expenses of Government honestly, wisely and economically administered, but not a dime for corrupt combination or special favoritism.

The right of all people to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, subject to just laws, and regardless of birth, creed, condition or color.

Recognition and reward of labor as the creator of reliable wealth.

Unrestricted liberty to worship God according to the dictates of individual conscience, unquestioned by any power, whether of Church or State.

Freedom of speech, the press and the ballot, unawed by threats and unpolluted by bribes.

A Union of independent and co-equal States, free to exercise all the privileges of sovereignty not delegated to the Constitution.

Public trusts to be a sacred duty and discharged with even greater fidelity than private interests.

Submission to the legally ascertained will of the majority.

The diffusion of intelligence.

Enlightened intercourse with all nations, but entangling alliances with none.

Such are the principles of Jefferson which we openly and earnestly advocate. They founded the American Republic, fostered its glory and prosperity, and they must be preserved and made operative in order to secure its future safety and welfare.

Democratic Conventions may at times have acted in a manner contrary to that [illegible] code, and men calling themselves Democrats may and doubtless have often turned aside from the path of political rectitude, still Jeffersonian principles and Freedom remain identical.

They are the TRUTH!

THE CONVENTION.

Before another issue of our paper the Convention for the selection of a Democratic Congressional candidate in this District meets.

We hope that representative body will make a prudent choice.

It is highly important.

The names of several gentlemen have been publicly mentioned and freely canvassed. We will not recount individual claims. The delegates can intelligently decide.

We must, however, again assert as our settled conviction, that [illegible]

The Fall races of the State [illegible] will be opened on Monday, September 18th.

DEMOCRATS OF PLAINFIELD.

On Friday evening of this week you come together for the purpose of selecting delegates to the Congressional Convention.

Let wisdom and harmony sway your action.

Elect judicious men to represent you. Send them to Freehold uninstructed as to the choice of a candidate for Congress, but commissioned to use all possible endeavors to cast a solid Union county vote for some Union county man.

Vennor prophesied that the early part of September would be sultry, droning and hot. He struck it pretty close.

The life-saving stations at the most dangerous points along the New Jersey coast were opened September 1st.

Gov. Ludlow has accepted the resignation of Brevet Brigadier General E. Burd Grubb, as commandant of the Sixth Regiment.

Seaborn Reese, who was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Eighth Georgia District last Friday, succeeds A. H. Stephens.

"Barnegat City" is the name of a new post office recently established. It is in Ocean county and Mary J. Jones was appointed post-mistress.

In Bridgeton, September 2d, the delegate election held in the First and Third Wards resulted in the election of ten delegates for Gov. M. [illegible].

The Democrats of the Second Congressional District have issued a call for their convention, to be held at Atlantic City, on September 19th, at noon.

The late Gov. Pennington's old mansion in Newark is empty, the family being at the sea-shore, and the neighbors are trying to catch a ghost supposed to be there.

The Fall meeting of the New Jersey trotting circuit will open at Morristown September 12th, and continue three days, when $1,800 in premiums will be distributed.

A census bulletin just issued puts New Jersey's population of voting age—that is, twenty-one years old and upward—at [illegible], of whom [illegible] are natives, [illegible] foreign born, and [illegible] colored.

The sash and blind factory of Ira Morgan, a three-story frame building in Rahway, was burned Thursday evening of last week with its contents, causing a loss of $3,000. There was no insurance on the property.

The improved appearance of the Hackettstown Gazette since it passed into new hands is a credit to the proprietors, W. L. and Chas. [illegible]. It is an evidence that a practical printer has recently laid hold of the "forms."

The citizens of Philadelphia are very anxious that the Second Brigade, National Guard, New Jersey, Brigadier and Brevet Major General William J. Sewell, should take part in the bi-centennial celebration of that city in October next.

Jeremiah H. Pine, the Asbury Park [illegible] who [illegible] his money, set fire to his cottage in Ocean Grove and alleged that the house had been [illegible] by giving bonds in $1,000 to await trial on a charge of arson.

The twenty-sixth annual convocation of the Grand Chapter R. A. M., of the State will be held at Masonic Hall, Trenton, on the 19th of September, and the annual meeting of the Grand Commandery Knights Templar will be held at the same place the next day.

At the Democratic primary meetings held in New Brunswick last Tuesday evening, all the delegates were elected in the interest of Miles Ross. The South Amboy delegates also favor Mr. Ross, and passed resolutions at their primary endorsing his course in Congress.

Ex-Governor Randolph, of Morristown, while visiting in Richmond, Va., recently, bought a silver watch supposed to have at one time belonged to Aaron Burr, several pieces of Continental money, and an original order for a pound of nails written by Thomas Jefferson.

The largest locomotive ever built has just been completed at Paterson, and is one of twenty-five ordered by the Central Pacific Railroad. Its weight without the tender is sixty-two tons. The size of the cylinder is twenty by thirty inches. These engines have eight drivers and a four wheeled truck.

Upon the basis of the last gubernatorial election the Congressional Convention for the Third District, to be held at Freehold on the 19th of September, will be represented by 104 delegates, viz:

Middlesex	[illegible]
Monmouth	[illegible]
Union	[illegible]

Guiteau's skeleton is now at the National Army Medical Museum in Washington, but will not be exhibited to the public. The final disposition of the bones of the assassin has not yet been determined upon and awaits the decision of Judge Hagner [illegible] as to the validity of Guiteau's will, in which he bequeathed his body to Dr. Hicks.

On Saturday afternoon last E. H. Brown, Obadiah Clark and [illegible] were elected delegates from Madison township, Middlesex county, to the Democratic Congressional Convention. Resolutions were passed indorsing the course of Hon. Miles Ross generally and particularly his vote on the River and Harbor bill and the appropriation for Cheesequake Creek.

The Edison Electric Light Company turned their illuminating currents on for the first time Saturday in the building of Drexel, Morgan & Co., at Wall and Broad streets, New York City. This event signals the advent of the Edison lights in the First district, which is bounded by Spruce and Wall and Nassau streets and the East River, and by Tuesday the whole district will be illuminated, it is promised.

The Monmouth county Agricultural Society has added to its list of special premiums [illegible]

REUNION OF THE 14th REGIMENT.

The annual reunion of the Fourteenth Regiment, N. J. Volunteers, is to be held [illegible] on the 19th of this month. The committee on arrangements met [illegible] on Saturday, August 26th.

The following committee were present: Gen. W. S. Truex, Colonel A. H. Patterson, Quarter Master [illegible], Major John C. Patterson, Adj't [illegible], Adj't [illegible], Lieut. H. B. [illegible], Sergeant [illegible], Corporal [illegible].

The usual committees on music, entertainment, &c., were appointed. [illegible], of Trenton, was selected as the orator of the day. Several other gentlemen will also be invited to deliver addresses. The committee was handsomely entertained at the residence of Adj't [illegible].

Last Saturday week was the 20th anniversary of the day the 14th Regiment was mustered into the service of the United States, at Camp Vredenburgh, near Freehold.

The Waverly Watchman says: "Whenever you hear a Democrat denouncing the party for this thing and that thing and asserting that Democrats are becoming less and less loyal to their party, you can just bet your bottom dollar that that Democrat is fast losing his own Democracy. He imagines because he is getting weak kneed in the cause that everybody else is in the same fix."

The Mayor of Hightstown has given notice that [illegible] business must cease on Sundays.

Riot and Murder at Elizabethport.

On Sunday last, an excursion, gotten up it is said, by the [illegible] Literary Assoc. of Elizabeth, went to Mt. Pleasant Grove, on the Hudson, on a steamboat with two barges. When the excursionists were landed at the dock at Elizabethport that evening, and while a large number of friends and acquaintances were in waiting to see the party land, a number of pistol shots were fired into the crowd from the two barges, and one man named Thomas McKeon, a resident of the Port, and who had gone to the dock to enjoy the cool air of the evening, was instantly killed. Another man named Richard Burke, was also shot in the left side, and may die from the wound. Others were also injured by flying beer glasses and other missiles thrown. The barges were finally cut loose and were towed away. How the fight originally started is not definitely known. [illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

RAMMY, RAMMY, RAM.

Mollie had a little ram as black as a rubber shoe, and everywhere that Mollie went he emigrated too.

He went with her to church one day—the folks hilarious grew, to see him walk demurely into Deacon Allen's pew.

The worthy deacon quickly let his angry passions rise, and gave it an unchristian kick between the sad brown eyes.

This landed rammy in the aisle; the deacon followed fast, and raised his foot again; alas! that first kick was his last.

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back, about a rod 'tis said, and ere the deacon could retreat it struck him on the head.

The congregation then arose and went for that 'ere sheep. Several well-directed butts just piled them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door with curses long and loud, while rammy struck the hindmost man and shoved him through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness would subdue the fiercest beast. "Aha!" he says, "I'll try that game on you."

And so he kindly, gently called: "Come rammy, rammy, ram; to see the folks abuse you so I grieved and sorry am."

With kind and gentle words he came from that tall pulpit down, saying: "Rammy, rammy, ram—best sheepy in the town."

The ram quite dropped his humble air and rose from off his feet, and when the parson landed he was beneath the hindmost seat.

As he shot out the door and closed it with a slam, he named a California town—I think 'twas "Yuba Dam."

LAW POINTS.

An authority to buy real estate must be in writing.

A writing admitting a balance due, is not assignable.

A witness subpoenaed to attend court, cannot be arrested by capias.

An intentional destruction of a note by a party thereto avoids it.

A party to a suit cannot be arrested while attending court, in any action for debt.

A book account cannot be assigned so that the assignee can sue thereon in his own name.

A lawyer cannot maintain an action for counsel fees, unless there is an express contract.

An alien having his domicil in this State is not exempt from taxation for military purposes.

A master may recover the value of the apprentice's service for his unexpired term from one who abducts him.

Tearing off the seals of a mortgage or even its entire destruction, by an unauthorized person, will not cancel it.

The owner of lands is responsible for damages arising from an area unprotected, opening into a public footway.

An assignment of rent after it is due, will not convey any right of suit to the assignee, nor divest the lessor of his right.

Untying and removing a horse from a public hitching post, when done by anyone without authority, amounts to trespass.

If a person intoxicated, fall asleep in his wagon, and his horse run away, he would be liable for all damages arising therefrom.

A female cannot be arrested in a civil suit in this State for fraud, but she may be attached for contempt for nonpayment of costs.

The following is a debatable point of law, whether striking a horse attached to a carriage in which a person is sitting, is an assault on the person.

A party whose goods are unlawfully distrained for rent, does not forfeit or waive any legal right by not claiming the goods when the distress is made.

The owner of a steam boiler, which he has in use on his own property is not responsible in the absence of negligence, for the damage done by its bursting.

A bank is not liable for the loss by burglary of valuables deposited in the vault of the bank, and no compensation paid therefor, when the effects of the bank are kept in the same vault.

Unjustly and unlawfully refusing to apply money or property to the satisfaction of a judgment or execution is a fraud, and the party injured may procure the arrest of the defendant.

When a person voluntarily pays money that could not be collected by legal process, but which in justice ought to be paid, it cannot be recovered; but where money is paid by compulsion, as excessive freight charges on a railroad, it can be recovered by law.

The owner of a passage boat, who has the management, disposition and direction of the same who advertises it for passage and receives the passage money, is liable for all unlawful acts, misdemeanors and negligence of the hands on board, in the ordinary course of business.

A tax collector receives a check in payment of taxes on a certain lot, and gives a receipt. This receipt was shown to a purchaser of the lot as evidence that the taxes were paid. The check was not paid and the city enforced the tax against the property in the hands of the purchaser. The purchaser sues the collector. Held, that such purchaser could not maintain an action against the collector for the loss sustained by him.

WHY HE OBJECTED.

A crude old farmer, living on the line of one of the recently talked-of surveys, and who is owner of a farm of large dimensions, with huge swinging doors on both sides, observed a party of surveyors busily driving a row of stakes through his premises that extended to the very centre of his big barn. Sauntering leisurely toward the trespassers, with an air savoring somewhat of indignation, he addressed the leader of the gang as follows:

"Layin' out another railroad?"

"Surveying for one," was the reply.

"Goin' through my barn?"

"Don't see how we can avoid it."

"Well, now," said the worthy farmer, "I calkerlate I've got somethin' to say 'bout that. I want you to understand I've got sumthin' else ter dew besides runnin' out to open and shet them doors every time a train wants ter go through."

Experience is the name men give to their follies or their sorrows.

"I'm talking [illegible] white dresses with me," she said. [illegible]

[illegible]

"What's that yer sayin' about washin'?" she asked, with half-opened eyes.

[illegible]

"Ma!" exclaimed her daughter, jumping up, "what are you talking about? We must really be going."

And they went, but it's safe to say the old woman's word caught it when they got into the carriage.—San Francisco Call.

A TRICK WORTH TEN DOLLARS.

A young man with a nose like a [illegible] and an eye which could have raised a blister on a shirt front on a hot day, halted a pedestrian on Union avenue and stated that he was trying to raise money to reach the bedside of his dying aunt in Chicago. He was too proud to beg, but if the citizen would give him a quarter he would show him a trick worth five dollars.

"Yes but that trick?" inquired the citizen.

"It is to make ten cents go further than a dollar. You can play it on the boys and make ten dollars a day."

[illegible]

"Yes, but this is something new. When you come down to the grocery every evening, you——"

"I don't come down. I was home on the sidewalk."

"But you could have a little fun with your neighbors."

[illegible]

"Well, I don't want to beg, and I am offering you this trick very low, in order to get home and see my sister die. Have you a dying sister?"

"I don't expect I have. You'll bet the dollar?"

"To make ten cents go further than a dollar."

"Dad will also do it?"

"Dad will."

"Can five cents go more as a half dollar?"

"Does so."

"Did a cent goes better as a dime?"

"I—I—I think it does."

"Did nothing at all goes better as five cents?"

"I guess."

[illegible]

HOW HE HEARD PATTI.

A young man remarked to a leading [illegible] that he was anxious to attend one of Mme. Adelina Patti's concerts—I believe the soulful—to hear the world-renowned songstress sing the beautiful melody, "Home, Sweet Home."

"But, my boy, you're not going to pay $5 for a seat, surely?" remarked the comedian.

[illegible]

"But how, my dear fellow? You don't know her."

"Well, I'll write to her and I bet I'll get an answer."

[illegible]

"A bottle of what you don't get is."

[illegible]

Mme. Patti immediately returned a letter [illegible]

"Papa, do you ever look at me when you are preaching?"

The means to prosper any end are as necessary as the end to be promoted.

There are people who are almost in love, almost famous, and almost happy.

The rich many despise those who flatter him too much, and hate those who do not flatter him at all.

UPSET SALE!

Commenced This Week and Gives Promise of Great Success.

Scotch people and old-time folks all know what is the meaning of "upset sale." It is a term used when things are to be sold out to close estates, partnerships or corporations.

I propose a sale of this nature. The prosperous season so far this year, the largest I ever had, encourages me to RING ALL THE BELLS!

and call the people in to close out, before the 1st of September,

The Balance of my Spring & Summer Goods.

Nothing stops me in executing the right plans, and if the prices must be cut down to gather the people

DOWN GO THE PRICES!

The people have treated me generously for many years and I am satisfied even though I do sacrifice my profits one month.

IN A NUTSHELL, THIS IS IT!

The practical point of all this is a radical reduction in prices from August first. They are cut, some less, some twenty, some thirty per cent., and some on goods prepared specially for this sale, not at all. My great desire is to get the people to examine the goods and see the reality of the reductions.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

HOW SHE CAUGHT HIM.

Mr. John Thomas came down to breakfast rosy and floosy, and looking as happy as any reasonable man might desire. His wife sat smiling at the head of the table and his little daughter, Maud Amelia, on one side. Mrs. Thompson smilingly poured out the coffee, and then with a pensive look, remarked: "I was at Madam Bodicotte's yesterday, looking at the spring bonnets"—a slight shadow passed over Thompson's face—"the loveliest things I ever beheld, and so cheap."

"Ah!" said Thompson, absently munching a cross.

"And then I just stepped into Field & Foster's," resumed Mrs. Thompson, "and there was a brocade spring silk rosebud. I thought I would go right over to-day and get it before it is snapped up by some one else. It's only thirty-five dollars."

Thompson winced. He began to understand about the true inwardness of the early spring chicken and crosses.

"My dear, couldn't you wait awhile? I have just at this time a pressing use for every dollar that I can command. Next week—"

Just here the door bell rang, and Miss Maude Amelia jumped down from her high chair and ran to answer it.

"It's your letters and papers, papa!" she cried, holding them up: "and one of 'em smells so nice; just like mamma's pretty bottles on her bureau."

Thompson looked at the missive in question. So did his wife; and she noticed that it was a lady's handwriting, and directed to "Mr. John Thompson."

She watched him as he glanced over the first few lines. Then he looked at the signature, smiled—a constrained and furtive smile—and folded the note, without finishing it, glanced at his wife, colored a little and slipped it under the papers beside his plate.

"Who is that perfumed envelope from?" inquired his wife.

"Why, a sort of business note," he answered, indifferently.

"From a lady?" said Mrs. Thompson, suspiciously.

"Yes—from a lady," he answered.

"What business can a lady have with you?"

"Only a little private business matter. I will tell you in a day or two. Why," glancing up at the clock, and then consulting his watch, "it's later than I thought by ten minutes. I must hurry."

And he did hurry, and in his haste went up stairs for something he had forgotten, leaving the letters on the table.

Mrs. Thompson did not allow the opportunity to pass unapproved. She listened till she heard her husband's footsteps on the top stairs, and then drawing forth the perfumed note, hurriedly opened it, and read as follows:

"Dear J.,—Where were you last evening! I looked for you all the time, but in vain. Romeo and Juliet were lovely. Romeo reminded me of you. Thanks for your lovely lilies! Do you remember what you said to me on Tuesday while eating ice cream on the balcony? Well, I have thought it all over and concluded that it will be the best after all. Come this evening early, and will make arrangements. Teddy has gone away. Nobody at home but L—— and L. Yours only, K."

Thompson was heard coming down stairs. His wife hastily slipped the note under the letter and disappeared by another door. He put the papers in his pocket and went away.

When Thompson came home that evening he found his wife nicely dressed and smiling in the parlor. He thought, after awhile, that there was something unusual about her. She looked nervous and excited, and rocking her chair very fast when she knitted the baby's carriage blanket, dropping a stitch now and then.

"What is the matter, Maggie? Aren't you well?" he inquired, standing before the fire and looking down on her.

"Oh, yes, perfectly well!" she replied, with a toss of her head and dropping two stitches.

Thompson sat down and unfolded his evening paper. Then his wife looked up with a smile.

"Going to the theatre to-night?"

"No; there's nothing much worth seeing, and you know I don't generally care about it."

"Don't you indeed? Thought you liked Romeo and Juliet?"

"They had that last night. [illegible] I believe," said Thompson, glancing at his paper. "Would you like to go?"

"I go? Oh indeed!" with another toss and dropping three more stitches.

Thompson began to read the report of the Queen of England's speech to the Parliament. Mrs. Thompson's speech broke in upon it.

"Wasn't it pleasant at the club" (strong emphasis on "club") Tuesday night?"

"Very; some capital songs and speeches."

"Oh, no doubt. Some very agreeable speeches. Ha, ha! And it was cool and pleasant on the balcony."

"What balcony?"

He was looking at her with eyes a little wider than usual; and she thought she had him now. He might pretend ignorance and innocence, but he could not deceive her again. Not indeed!

"What's the price of lilies?" she inquired, fixing her eyes upon him as though they had been a pair of skewers to pierce his conscience through and through.

"Lilies! I really don't know."

"Oh, the consummate hypocrite! the cold-blooded deceiver!" she thought. But she only remarked sarcastically:

"Ice cream, is good!"

Thompson turned a little pale as he looked at her. She perceived this, and gave a triumphant hysterical giggle.

"Maggie, my dear!" said Mr. Thompson, gently laying aside his paper, and speaking in a faltering voice.

"Oh, yes? I'm your dear, am I? 'Yours only,' of course. Ha, ha! Oh, my! Ha, ha, ha!"

Thompson was white now. He sat for a moment looking intently at his wife, then started up and seized his hat and gloves.

"Where are you going?" inquired Mrs. Thompson, with sudden forced calmness, while her eyes glittered ominously.

He made her no answer, but with hasty steps left the house.

Mrs. Thompson was now aroused to the highest pitch of jealousy, and she reflected a moment as to what to do. A thought came like an inspiration, and she at once proceeded to act upon it.

When Thompson returned in about ten minutes, with the family physician, he was met in the hall by the bewildered help, Mary. Her mistress was at the top of the stairs, looking down on them and listening.

"Oh, sir, missus is in such a way! She's packing up all her things and going to run away, and carry the precious children with her."

"I told you so, doctor," said Thompson, with a look of agony. "She's entirely out of her mind. Can nothing be done for her?"

"Before I see your wife," said the doctor, deliberately, "describe to me as well as you can how this sudden attack came on. Have you observed any symptoms before this evening?"

"Never."

"Has anything occurred during the day to excite or affect her?"

"Not that I know of. At breakfast she was as well as usual— Ah stay! she was a little worried by my not being able to supply her at once with money for a spring bonnet and dress—"

"Ah," said the doctor, knowingly: "two such cases in the Midland Asylum. Anything else?"

"Nothing, except— Yes there was a little vexation about a letter.

"Nothing of importance. I happened to receive a letter, which, upon opening I discovered to be intended for quite another person—young John Thompson, of Cresswell & Co. It was from a lady friend, and I, of course, could not gratify Mrs. Thompson's curiosity in regard to it, and she seemed vexed."

Mrs. Thompson crept away from the head of the stairs, and very quietly laid down upon the lounge. She looked pale, but serene.

"How are you, dear?" inquired her husband, softly, seating himself by her side.

"A great deal better love, I must have had a nervous attack; but its over now."

A few days thereafter the whole town was excited and triumphant over the elopement of young John Thompson with the lovely Kate Lindsay, whose cruel and hard hearted brother, Todd, had opposed their union.

"I fully expected it," said Thompson to his wife.

And then he told all about the letter, which he said he had hastened to deliver to his namesake, for whom it had been intended.

"Why didn't you tell me this at once?" inquired Mrs. Thompson, reproachfully.

"Because, my dear, I know that you, or any other woman, would have told it in confidence to a dozen friends, and so have spoiled the lovers plan."

THE DOUBLE DEAL.

During the recent trotting meeting in this city, one evening at the Brunswick, a little group of horse owners and fanciers were sitting in the gentlemen's parlor puffing their cigars and exchanging views upon the merits and demerits of the trotters and drivers that had figured in the sporting events of the day, when one of the younger members turned to a gray-haired, lanky, down East looking man of nearly 60 years of age, and said:

"Uncle Wash, what's the reason you never bring your horses to Detroit?"

The old man laughed silently for a moment, threw back his head, and replied:

"'Cause the climit don't agree with 'em."

"What's the matter with the climate? It agrees with my horses well enough."

"Ya-as. But your hosses and my hosses is diffrunt. Time was when the climit here was all right for my hosses, but that was more'n twenty years ago. Yes, sir, it's more'n twenty years since I trotted a hoss in Detroit. There was a big change in the climit at that time, and I'd a lost a good hoss then if I hadn't got him out er town at better'n a three-minit gait.

"Ye-see, it was away back afore the war, and one spring I thought I'd take a hoss I'd been trainin' and come West with him. He was a good hoss, seven years old, and hadn't never trotted in a race 'cept at county fairs. He could trot in thirty, and I made up my mind to cut him loose in Chicago, but I changed my mind. I trotted him in Buffalo and took second money without gettin' a record. Then I come to Detroit. I'd never been here afore, and nobody know'd me.

"When we come to git on the track there was some real good hosses there 'sides Santy Anny—that's my hoss's name—and there was some as wa'nt worth a darn; just a lot of skivers and jumpers. There was a big crowd, and they were swarmin' the pool box for all there was in it. They'd got the pools all fixed, and the suckers was a-bitin' fast. Red Robin was a-sellin' for $10, Blue Bill for 'bout $6, and the field was a-bringin' sixteen or seventeen. 'Bout half the suckers was a-pilin' their money onto the favorite, and the other half was buyin' the field. The sharpers was a-havin' a perfect picnic a-buyin' [illegible]

"Robin won the first heat easy, Bill the fourth, and I'd been bringin' Santy Anny in second or third all the time. When I went to the stable after the fourth heat, three or four fellers was there a-waitin' for me, and [illegible] one of 'em, ses he: 'Say, old man, can't you win this race?'

"'Perhaps I could,' ses I.

"'For how much?' ses he.

"'Twenty dollars,' ses I.

"'Go in an' win the next heat,' ses he, 'and I'll have yer money ready for yer by that time.'

"Well, I won the fifth heat easy, and they sent all the skivers and jumpers to the barn. Afore we started for the sixth heat, the feller came around and give me that thousand. I won that heat though Robin's driver tried hard to break me up by running his hoss an' hollerin', and Santy Anny was a trotter and no mistake. He'd got used to that kind of [illegible] tricks at the country fairs, and the louder you hollered the faster he'd trot. When Santy Anny came in ahead [illegible] the crowd cheered him, and there was trouble over in the sharpers' camp. While me and Joe—that's my boy—was a-drivin' Santy, along comes the feller I seen up ther track today, and ses he: 'That's a purty good hoss o' yourn.'

"'Kin trot some,' ses I.

"'How much do you want for him?' ses he.

"'He ain't for sale,' ses I.

"'What'll yer take for him for half an hour?'

"'Thousand dollars,' ses I, 'but I must driv 'im,' ses I.

"'I don't care who drives, so's yer hoss don't git here fust,' ses he. 'Here's yer money.'

"After he'd gone away, I told Joe to be down on the quarter-stretch when the heat was trotted, and when I got down out of ther sulky, to jump right up, drive right out of ther gate, and to send Santy Anny down to ther old Railroad Hotel—that was where the Opry House now is—'bout as fast as ther law'd low.

"Well, that heat I cut Santy loose an' he come mighty near a-shettin' Robin and Bill out, and 'bout two thousand suckers threw up their hats and hollered. I driv up in front of ther judges' stand and held up my whip. 'All right,' ses they. 'Come in an' weigh.' There was a terrible rush of folks to the quarter-stretch, but I knew they wouldn't dare touch me there, but when I came out from weighin' I seed a big crowd a-goin' over towards Santy's stable, but Santy wasn't there. I just bumped it over to ther gate, jumped into a hack, an' an hour afterwards me and Santy was in a box car headed to'ards Chicago, and there was two thousand down in my pantaloons pocket.

"Since then I've had an idea that the climate of Detroit wa'n't good for any of my hosses."

MILITARY EPISODE.

This story is found in the memoirs of a Prussian officer of distinction. He was at the time on the staff of Gen. Winterfield, one of the most skillful and competent captains of his day, and Winterfield was the general in command at the time spoken of.

Two soldiers had been condemned to death. In a drunken condition they had assaulted an officer of the line, and one of them had drawn a knife upon him, but he could not positively say which of the twain being it. And the men themselves did not know. Neither of them remembered anything about it. So both of them were condemned to be hung.

They were both excellent soldiers, and only one of them had been guilty of using a weapon.

The officers of the division, including him who had been assaulted, asked that the men might be pardoned. At length Winterfield said he would pardon one of them. Only one had held a knife, and only that one ought to die. He would pardon one, and the men must themselves decide which of them should be shot.

How should the decision be made?

"Let us shake the dice," said one of the condemned.

And the other agreed to it. And since it was agreed to by all interested. The two men took their places by the side of a big drum and were to throw the dice upon its head. The dice were given them and a proper box for shaking.

The first man threw two sixes. He groaned in agony. He felt that he had consigned his comrade to death.

But when the second came to throw he also threw two sixes. "Wonderful!" cried the lookers on. They were ordered to shake and throw again.

This time the second man threw first—two aces. Ho! Good! You will live, Peter. But when Peter threw, the dice presented those same two aces. And now the beholders were wonder stricken, indeed.

Another throw was ordered, and Peter threw a five and a deuce. The other threw—five—deuce. After the excitement had again subsided the man shook once more. The first threw two fours. "Oh! now throw fives and save yourself, Peter." Peter threw—two fours.

At this point the colonel ordered them to stop. He went and reported the marvelous result to Winterfield. Said he: "Clearly, general, Providence will have two men to be saved."

And saved they were. The general cared not to oppose the wonderful fate of the dice. It did seem providential and so he accepted it.

And the redeemed soldiers lived to prove that the saving fate had given back to Prussia two of the very best and bravest of her sons.

A LUCKY THING.

Two or three years ago there was a smash-up on the Grand Trunk road, and among the killed was a woman about fifty years old, who lived on the line. The husband sued, and body taken care of, and after a few days an agent went down to see how the matter could be settled.

"It is a sad affair, of course," he observed, "but in a business point of view we must look at her age. She was over fifty and in poor health, then she had weak eyes and a bad cough. She was a wife, of course, but she was also a source of expense and anxiety. While she was a companion in one sense, she had a hacking cough and snored in her sleep."

The peppery old man had been moving about uneasily, and as soon as the agent was through, he called out:

"I don't care how old she was, nor how bad she coughed, nor how loud she snored! I want this 'ere railroad company to come down with $500, or I'll sue 'em till they can't rest! And I want you to understand that it's lucky for your infernal old line that I happened to find a widow ready to marry me Sunday week! If I hadn't I would have stuck for $800, if it busted the farm."

DEMOCRATIC.

If political parties are essential, and very few persons will assert the contrary, their thorough and effective organization is of vital importance.

By the nominating system now and for many years in vogue, conventions for the selection of candidates are composed of delegates directly chosen by party voters in each election district, and consequently, their assembled action must be accepted as an expression of the partisan will.

It is perfectly fair and proper to criticise, favorably or unfavorably, gentlemen named for nomination, but when a certain one has been declared by a regularly held convention of the party the nominee, honor and fidelity demand that he shall be cheerfully supported as such.

Acquiescence in the will of the majority, fairly expressed, is a foremost and time sanctioned creed of Democracy.

ON THE WING.

The present Congress created a singular official body called the Tariff Commission.

In the first place, Congress had no just right to do anything of the kind, for the plain and common sense reason, that Congressmen are elected and paid to discharge personal duty as such, among which is the investigation of a tariff, through committees of their own respective branches, and not through any outside agency.

In the second place, the said Tariff Commission was ostensibly formed to carefully examine into the present system of imposts upon foreign importations and report what, if any, changes were required.

Now, to any practical business man, the proper line of action for the Commissioners to pursue would have been to meet, organize and remain in New York, or some other commercial city, and there call before them written or oral testimony effecting every industrial pursuit in the country, and after patient inquiry and impartial deliberation, to have reached an intelligent conclusion regarding the highly important matter referred to them.

What have they done and what are they doing?

Sojourning for weeks at the elegant West End, Long Branch, living like nabobs at the public expense, snuffing the free salt air, listening to the sad sea waves, and occasionally to the pitiful cry of some millionaire iron-master or manufacturer in quest of more protection, the hot weather drawing to a close at the sea-side, away swing the Commissioners, at the peoples' expense mind you, all around the circle, stopping for a good dinner at Buffalo, Detroit, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago, and when last heard from intending possibly to keep on swinging towards Alaska, San Francisco, San Antonio, New Orleans and Coon Hollow.

All at the dear peoples' expense.

What a blessed thing it is to have a full treasury—not for the tax-paying masses, but for Commissioners hunting up tariff data in parlor cars and banqueting halls?.

One hundred and twenty-eight per cent. ad-valorem:
Humbug free.
Wines and Segars in profusion.
Uncle Sam foots the bill.

NEEDLESS TAXATION.

It was a Democratic proposition, introduced at the last session of Congress, to abolish all internal revenue taxation, with the exception of that on distilled spirits and a few other items, and thereby rid the country of an army of paid revenue office-holders now costing the tax-payers of this country over five million dollars a year.

Such Congressional action would effect an annual saving of eighty million dollars to the people, and lessen the immense surplus revenue yearly collected without need, and made a constant temptation for profligate expenditure.

The Republican majority in Congress, after much hesitation, consented to reduce internal taxation within certain ill-judged limits to the aggregate amount of about $23,000,000, but not the costly and useless horde of tax officials.

To that the Democrats very properly objected, saying—"Cut out the festering sore and entirely remove a public imposition."

The remedy was not granted.

The business interests of the people must continue to suffer without just cause.

Mr. Springer, of Illinois, truthfully reviewed the subject when he thus spoke in the House of Representatives:

"The internal revenue laws are war measures.

They were necessary when enacted, as the necessities of the Government demanded the greatest sacrifice on the part of every citizen.

But the war ended seventeen years ago, and to-day we have an overflowing Treasury and a hundred and fifty millions collected annually over and above the necessities of the Government.

A full Treasury oppresses the people, invites a corrupt lobby, and encourages all manner of extravagant appropriations.

Reduce the taxes.

Wipe out the odious and oppressive features of the internal revenue laws.

Relieve the people from spies, informers, and, as far as possible, from annoying exactions of every kind, character, and description."

To which we heartily respond-Amen!

Never was there an election of officials that reflected greater credit to any party than the election of our efficient County Clerk and Surrogate. It is universally admitted that the efficiency and capability of County Clerk Vosseller and Surrogate Gerber, have made their respective offices models in their way, and without desiring to prejudge the action of the approaching County Convention, we assert that the best interests of our County at large demands their renomination and election.

For County Clerk, JAMES S. VOSSELLER,
For Surrogate JAMES J. GERBER.

MILES ROSS RENOMINATED

Despite a slight opposition in Union County and the supposed instructions of the Monmouth Co. Democracy for their delegates not to support Miles Ross should Union County agree on a candidate, Mr. Ross captured the convention on Tuesday at Freehold for the fifth time and will go back to Congress.

The convention was called to order at 12 o'clock by James H. Patterson, of Monmouth County, but the portion of the hall allotted to the fifty-nine delegates from Union County was vacant. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock and a committee appointed to wait upon the Union delegation and inform them that the convention awaited their presence. Union had been in hot caucus for two hours, and only a few moments before the convention reconvened did they unanimously agree upon a candidate.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported the following nominations which were accepted:

President—Dr. James H. Patterson of Monmouth.

Vice Presidents—Charles D. Deshler, of Middlesex; Wm. Conover, of Monmouth; Wm. R. Wilson, of Union.

Secretaries—Wm. H. Price, of Middlesex; Thos. Terrill, Jr., of Union; John Williams, of Monmouth.

In the appointment of Committees Union County was represented as follows On Permanent Organization, Henry F. Alpers, of Westfield; Credentials, D. J. Marshall, of Plainfield; Resolutions, G. W. Doty, of Union.

Union delegates were jubilant because they had been promised both by Ross and Monmouth County that in case Union could agree on a candidate Ross would withdraw, and the uninstructed delegates of Monmouth County, numbering seventy-eight, would support Union's candidate, thus nominating him. The counties were then called in alphabetical order to nominate their respective candidates, the chairman asking that the presenting speeches be as brief as possible. Middlesex County was called to present their nominee. Mr. Charles W. Deshler, in presenting the name of their candidate said that for the fifth time he had the pleasure of standing in convention and presenting the name of Mr. Miles Ross for the consideration of the other counties representing the Third Congressional District. Mr. Deshler's speech was an able defense of Ross in voting for the River and Harbor bill and a praise of his honesty to his constituents. The speech was loudly applauded by the Middlesex and Monmouth county delegations, but not enthusiastically received by the Union delegation. He occupied forty minutes in reading old bills passed by Congress during Andrew Jackson's administration during which he showed the fact that under Jackson, Ashtabula creek in Ohio got an appropriation of $7,000, and told of further river and harbor appropriations made long before Miles Ross took his seat in Congress. A delegate arose and asked the Chairman whether it was not in order to make nominations and not speeches. This remark brought down the house, and it was with difficulty that Chairman Patterson called the Convention to order. The speaker had hardly resumed when a delegate from Union arose to a point of order and asked the Chairman whether it would not be better to go into nominations and not go over the history of the United States. After awhile the Convention came to order and Mr. Deshler finished his speech.

Monmouth county, when called, said they had no nominee. Gen. J. Aug. Fay, of Union, then nominated Mr. Cornelius W. L. Martine. Garret Berry, of Rahway, seconded the nomination, and said that to Union belonged the nomination. Monmouth was then called and ex-Sheriff Patterson cast the 78 votes of the county for Miles Ross. Middlesex county then cast their 67 votes for Miles Ross. When the vote of Union was called a discussion arose as to how the votes should be cast. It was finally agreed to cast their votes by wards and townships. Ross received 21 votes and Martine 34 votes. Four blank votes were cast. Chairman Patterson then announced that Miles Ross, having received 166 votes, was the nominee of the Third Congressional District.

The following is the vote by wards and townships:

ELIZABETH.	MARTINE.	ROSS.
1st Ward	1	4
2d Ward	3	5
3d Ward	8	0
4th Ward	1	1
5th Ward	4	0
6th Ward	2	0
7th Ward	2	0
8th Ward	0	3
RAHWAY.
1st Ward	0	2
4th Ward	0	1

Plainfield—6 votes for Martine.
Linden—1 for Ross; 1 for Martine.
Clark—blank.
Fanwood—1 for Martine.
Westfield—2 for Ross.
Cranford—blank.
Union—3 for Martine.
Springfield—1 for Martine.
Summit—1 for Martine; 1 blank.
New Providence—1 for Martine.

The delegates from Union County held their caucus at Rossell Hall at 11:30 a. m. Julius A. Fay of Elizabeth, was chosen chairman and Walter L. Hetfield, of Plainfield, secretary.

Thomas Terrill, Jr., of Elizabeth, Jas. Clark of Plainfield and Dr. Silvers of Rahway, were appointed a committee on credentials.

The credentials from the several wards and townships were presented and the committee reported no contesting delegation. Clark and Linden townships unrepresented. Wm. T. Melick of Rahway and Daniel G. Hetfield, were appointed by the caucus to represent Clark and Linden townships, respectively.

A motion was made and carried that the caucus go into nomination for a candidate for Congress. Wm. R. Wilson of Elizabeth and Daniel J. Marshall of Plainfield, were appointed tellers.

William B. Maxson of Plainfield, C. W. L. Martine of Fanwood, William A. Coursen, Robert S. Green and John T. Dunn of Elizabeth, were nominated.

An informal ballot was taken with the vote scattering among all the candidates, several blanks, Miles Ross receiving 11 votes. On the first formal ballot Maxson received 16 votes, Martine 13 votes, John T. Dunn 7 votes, Robert S. Green 7 votes, Miles Ross 12 votes, Wm. H. Coursen 1 vote, blank 4. The second ballot resulted in Maxson receiving 14 votes, Martine 20 votes, Ross 13 votes, Green 9 votes, Dunn 2, 58 votes being cast. On the third ballot Martine received 25 votes, Maxson 9, Ross 11, Green 3, Dunn 2, blank 2—52 votes being cast. The fourth ballot resulted about the same as the last. The fifth ballot gave Martine 26 votes, Maxson 4, Ross 11, Green 3, blank 2—46 votes being cast. While the ballot was being taken, it being nearly 2 o'clock, the time to which the Convention had adjourned, nearly one half of the delegation had left the Hall. After the ballot was counted a motion was made and carried that the chairman present the name of C. W. L. Martine, of Fanwood as the choice of Union County in the Convention, after which the caucus adjourned, having made no selection for the different committees in the Convention. The caucus had a very stormy and exciting time.

The Committee on Resolutions reported as follows:

Resolved, That the Democratic party of the Third Congressional District of New Jersey favor the encouragement and protection by proper legislation of the large industries of the country, commercial and manufacturing, upon which its prosperity so largely depends.

—That the Democratic party is unalterably opposed to the system which has been resorted to by the Republican party of robbing the clerks and employees of the Government of a portion of their hard-won earnings for political purposes, practically reducing them to the condition of enslavement to the leaders of their party, and the advancement of their own selfish ends, holding that every man in this broad land should be left free to the exercise of his political opinions and the furtherance of the political interests of the candidates of his choice.

—That this convention reiterates the declarations of the Democratic party, that the public lands be held for the use of settlers and not appropriated to the purposes of large and overshadowing corporations.

—That we adhere to the old-time principles of the Democratic party in welcoming to this country the honest and industrious people of foreign lands, who, escaping from the tyranny of European countries, seek this land as a refuge from oppression, and pledge to them an equal right with us under the Constitution and the laws.

—That this convention indorse the unswerving devotion of Miles Ross as member of Congress to the interests of this Congressional District.

—That we pledge the nominee our hearty support.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and it was ordered that the next Congressional Convention be held at the city of Elizabeth.

The following committee was appointed to apprise Mr. Ross of his nomination: Messrs. C. D. Deshler, Michael Taylor and J. A. Fay, Jr.

The convention then adjourned.

* * *

We to-day place at our mast head the name of Hon. Miles Ross for Congress, he having fairly received the nomination at Freehold on Tuesday last.—While we had hoped that Union County's claim to the nomination would be recognized in the Convention, we bow to the decision of that body, and extend to him the support he should receive after he has regularly and so unanimously been nominated.

Mr. Harris Accepts.

AUGUST 18, 1882.

HON. HENRY S. HARRIS.

DEAR SIR:—The undersigned are a Committee appointed by the Democratic Congressional Convention of the Fourth District of this State, to inform you of your nomination by that Convention as the Democratic candidate for Representative in the Forty-Eight Congress.

We take great pleasure in communicating to you the action of that Convention, feeling assured that your nomination will be ratified by the people at the polls in November.

We are, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

JOHN N. VOORHEES,
FRANK M. WARD,
JAMES J. BERGEN,
JOHN SIMERSON,
Committee.

BELVIDERE, August 30, 1882.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter informing me that I have been nominated by the Democratic Convention of the Fourth District of New Jersey, for Representative from the said district in the Forty-Eight Congress.

I accept the nomination, and return through you my sincere thanks for the honor a second time thereby conferred upon me.

In so doing I do not ignore the fact that my recent votes in favor of the bill for the improvement of Rivers and Harbors on its original passage, and also sustaining it over the veto of the President have, contrary to my expectation, met with the disproval of many of my constituents for whose opinion I entertained a sincere respect. I believe that a representative should yield his own opinion to that of his constituents on all questions where doubts can arise; and I do not hesitate to say that had the opposition to that measure, apparent since its passage, manifested itself to me prior thereto, I would not have disregarded it.

My reasons for believing the bill to be a proper one were in the main set forth in my address to the Convention previous to my nomination, and need not, therefore, be here repeated.

It was my effort there not to convince every one that I was right, nor to place any one in any discordant position, but to clearly signify what my motives were, in order that those who could agree with me might do so, and that those who could not might attribute to me that honesty of purpose and intention to which I felt entitled, and which the generous mind never withholds.

I accept the nomination of the Convention, recognizing that it was made so by those who entertained the differences of opinion I have indicated.

And, mindful of the trust reposed in me, I pledge to them, to the great party which they represented and to every citizen whose representative I shall be, if elected, my best endeavor in their interests, and a due observance of their wishes so far as I can ascertain them.

Very respectfully yours,
HENRY S. HARRIS.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Samuel H. Lockwood has recovered from his severe attack of illness on Wednesday last.

Surgeon-Dentist, C. Augeire, has rented the cottage of Eb Hart, jr., on Quimby street and intends occupying it soon.

L. Buddell with his wife and family sailed on Wednesday morning last for Europe where he intends to make it his home for the next three years.

George N. Scudder has sold out his wagons, cans, and milk route in Westfield to Theodore Starr, who intends taking charge of the business on the 18th.

Mrs. Benj. Cole's lunch room on Broad street, which has been recently opened, is doing a good business. Clam chowder is furnished in any quantity every Thursday.

Luther M. Whitaker and James T. Pierson were elected on Monday evening last delegates to the Republican Congressional convention to be held at New Brunswick.

The Bucket and Engine Company will meet in the Town rooms, Broad street, on Monday evening the 18th inst., at 8 o'clock. There is considerable business of importance to be transacted.

Rumor has it that one of our residents, who has recently come to reside in our midst, has fallen heir to a large proportion of the sum of one hundred million dollars of an estate in Scotland.

John Hetfield living on Springfield road, had about half of his flock of poultry stolen on Saturday night last. The farmers had better get their guns prepared for the annual raid made by chicken thieves.

One of our hackmen, Adam Miller, has sold out his establishment to Bennitt Brittin, of Scotch Plains. Mr. Miller has bought out a large milk route in the city of Rahway where he has removed, to conduct and look after the same.

The delegates chosen to represent Westfield township at the Congressional convention on Tuesday last were Henry F. Alpers and John M. C. Marsh. Mr. Alpers, at the convention, was chosen to represent Union county as one of the committee on permanent organization.

Dr. Charles A. Kinch, formerly of our place, but now a resident of New York City, and who has been lying dangerously ill at his residence with pneumonia for the past two weeks, is now considered out of danger by his physicians and in a fair way to a speedy recovery.

The entertainment given by Percy Vanderpool, in his costumed impersonations, was but slimly attended. The entertainment was deserving of a full house. The programme was varied and well rendered. Mr. Vanderpool expects to visit our town shortly again, when it is hoped he may have a full house.

There was considerable excitement at Battle Swamp, or better known as "West End," on Friday afternoon last. The irrepressible John Peiffer and John Johnson having met and discussed the question of tieing a cow, from words came to blows, both getting very severely punished about the head, Peiffer having a large scalp wound on his cranium. They were both arrested for assault and battery on complaint of each other and taken before Justice Jaques, who held them both to bail to await the action of the Grand Jury in October.

The mayor of Smoky Hollow went on a crabbing excursion with a friend on Saturday last. The mayor had never been near salt water before. After a great deal of persuasion he was induced to get into a row boat to go out into the stream and fish for crabs. After the boat had been anchored preparatory to crabbing, the mayor insisted on standing up on the bow of the boat looking at the various crafts going up and down the river. The water being quite rough the boat rocked considerable, and finally the Mayor, loosing his balance, went overboard, backwards in about 15 feet of water. He could not swim and as he came up along side of the boat he was pulled in by his friend. The mayor says he never tasted such nasty water in all his life.

Phoebe Ross, better known as Aunt Phebe, died on Friday morning last aged 95 years and twelve days. She maintained her eyesight and mental faculties up to the hour of her death. She was for 74 years a communicant and worthy member of the Presbyterian Church. She was born and always resided in the township of Westfield. She was the oldest of a family of five children. Her brother, John O. Miller, who resides on the Miller homestead at Cranford, is aged 86 years, and is the only one of her brothers now living. Her funeral occurred on Sunday last. Services were held in the Presbyterian church, the Rev. N. Cadwell officiating. Her body was interred in the old Presbyterian burying ground adjoining the church, in the family plot along side the grave of her husband, Ichabod Ross, who died in the year 1830.

OH,
FOR AN OPERA HOUSE!

NEW moon last Tuesday evening.

FAMILIAR sound—the school bell.

THE straw hat has seen its best days.

THE first of Fall openings is that of the oyster.

THE nose of the hay fever victim looks like the setting sun.

STOVE-PIPE hats and Fall coats are nearly ready to be picked.

THE New Jersey State Fair opens at Waverly next Tuesday.

PEACHES are now in their prime. Watermelons and other fruits are plentiful.

HOMELINESS is not a bar to any imposition in life except that of the masher.

IN our advertising columns will be noticed as to rent a very desirable cottage of seven rooms.

A CONVENTION of the Y. M. C. A. of Sussex, Morris and Passaic counties, is to be held at Morristown, Sept. 20th.

EXPERT Buck is now at work figuring the amount of interest on taxes collected by Mr. Clark during his term of office.

ACCORDING to rumor, the Crescent nine will play the Westfield's at the latter place, to-morrow afternoon, at 4:45 o'clock.

WE will publish no more fish stories, unless the fish are sent to this office to corroborate the yarns told about their capture.

THOSE who have an eye to the prospects of a good nut yield predict a large crop of chestnuts, hickory and other varieties this Fall.

THE only three counties of this state that are out of debt, are situated in South Jersey. They are Atlantic, Cumberland and Gloucester.

VENNOR says that September will be fair and frosty; October and November wet; December very stormy and plenty of snow. Perhaps.

DURING Collector Brown's first six months in the office he has paid over to the Board of Education $10,963.97 and to the Treasurer of the city, $16,251.32.

YOUNG man, if you want to know the girl that makes the best bread and cake in Union and Middlesex counties, attend the coming Fair, Sept. 26, 27, 28, 29 and 30.

HERE is something for every Jerseyman to be proud of: The average value of the farm land of the State is more per acre than that of any other of the United States.

BROODS of young partridges are reported as being plentiful this year. And they will have to be very plentiful indeed if there is a bird apiece for the hundreds of gunners.

JUST as the most enjoyable season of the year approaches, many of our summer tourists are leaving for their homes. The months of September and October are the fairest of the whole year.

MR. HOLLY is to have a noonday prayer meeting for business men. A novel feature will be a hot lunch from ten to twelve o'clock in the morning and this is guaranteed to draw like everything.

A census bulletin just issued puts New Jersey's population of voting age—that is, twenty-one years old and upward—at 300,635, of whom 190,656 are natives, 99,309 foreign born, and 10,670 colored.

IN this issue the School Trustees of North Plainfield advertise for sealed proposals for work to be done and materials furnished in the erection of the new public school building over the brook.

AFTER a thorough redecoration of its interior, Grace church was last Sunday again opened for service. We shall take an early opportunity to comment in detail upon the beautiful work of the artists employed.

CHIEF Engineer Vail has given Alert Hose company permission to take both its silver and working carriages to Morristown on Wednesday, Oct. 11th, and participate in the parade of the Fire Department of that city.

NO. 2 steamer tried the new fire-well at Grand View avenue, North Plainfield, Tuesday evening, and found after thirty minutes pumping that the water still flowed in abundance. The trial was a remarkable success.

IN an another column we publish an article by a lady of Watertown, N. Y., regarding "women's work in the Young Men's Christian Association." It is an interesting review and full of suggestions to the women of this city.

IF oystermen are to be believed the frosts of Summer and the heat of Winter have damaged the prospects for a large supply. However, the same rule applies to oysters as to peaches, the best crops are raised when the dealers say they are a failure.

ON Thursday afternoon of next week, Mr. Isaac Brokaw will sell at auction twenty very desirable building lots situated on Grove street extension, Madison avenue and Cedar street, North Plainfield. The sale will take place on the premises at 2:30 o'clock.

ONE of Plainfield's three precocious kids (whose start to fight "ye wild Ingun" by stolen means of transportation, was recently recorded in these columns) was arrested on Saturday last as a sneak thief and sent to the Reform School, Wednesday.

THE attention of the county and local authorities is called to the notice in another column of Comptroller Anderson, directing them to forward as required by law, their statements of the financial condition of the respective counties &c., before the first day of October.

OUR veracious contemporary the Central Times states that an anti-Boss club is to be formed by Plainfield Democrats, and in its editorial column estimates that two hundred votes will be rolled up against that candidate, on election day in Plainfield. That settles it! Poor Boss!

IF you have trouble to get your last year's catsup bottles perfectly clean, after washing them thoroughly in suds and rinsing in clear water, chop a potato quite fine, mix it with a little warm water, put this in the bottle and shake it well; it will surely remove any foreign substance.

THE Somerset County Fair is now open in all classes for exhibitors from all parts of the State. Persons wishing to exhibit can have a premium list by addressing Wm. S. Potter, Somerville, N. J. Also, one has been sent by mail to almost every hotel and post office in Union county. The Fair is October 3, 4, 5 and 6.

A WRITER says: "It is our practice, when wishing to purchase anything outside of our regular trading place to hunt for an advertisement in the local paper, make a note of it and start for home prepared to go direct to the house where the articles is to be had; and there is no reason for doubting that many others do likewise. Advertising pays."

THE twenty-seventh annual Fair of the Hunterdon County Agricultural Society will be held at Flemington, on Sept. 26th, 27th and 28th. The society offers the following speed premiums: 3:20 horses, $60; 2:33 horses, $400; running horses, $200; 2:50 horses, $100; 2:40 horses, $200; trotting stallions, $75; special county, $100. Entries for speed close September 16th, at 9 o'clock p. m.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of Dr. Rufus Reed, of Lambertville, who will make weekly visits to this city, stopping at E. P. Thorn's City Hotel, for the purpose of treating hemorrhoids or piles. He is highly recommended by physicians and prominent citizens of Lambertville and Trenton as a skillful specialist in the diseases mentioned, and also as a gentleman and honest man. Those afflicted will therefore please take notice.

For Bicyclers.

At the State Fair at Waverly during Friday of next week, there will be held a bicycle tournament for amateurs open to the residents of the State only. Over $300 worth of gold medals will be given in the following contests: One-mile championship; two-mile handicap; half-mile dash; fancy riding; five-mile scratch, and one-mile handicap. Entries close next Monday with H. W. Knight, 785 Broad street, Newark. Entry fee $1. Let Plainfield's gallant wheelmen show their ability.

The Children's New Home.

On a beautifully situated lot of 100 by 127 feet on Jackson near Watchung avenue, North Plainfield, the Children's Home Association laid with appropriate ceremonies, during Thursday afternoon of last week, the corner stone of their new building. A large attendance gathered, and those who took active part upon the occasion included the Revs. Lemmon, Yerkes, Murphy, [illegible] and Lewis, Mayor Randolph and President Rushmore of the Common Council.

The cost of the building is to be about $7,000, and that it will be both beautiful and convenient is assured by the fact of its architect being Mr. Chas. H. Smith, the talented designer of the Park avenue Baptist church, the Muhlenberg Hospital and ex-Councilman Waring's new residence.

Personals.

City Treasurer Van Winkle is the proud father of another boy.

Mr. Randolph Marsh and daughter are visiting friends in Hartford, Conn.

Mr. E. J. Shaw is attending the United States Pharmaceutical Convention at Niagara.

Miss Ada Perry of New York is visiting Plainfield, the guest of Miss Minnie Boldman of this city.

Mr. George Vincent of New Haven, is spending a few days with Mr. Lambert Foster of North Plainfield.

Mr. Gus Frazee, Plainfield's accommodating expressman between this city and New York, has "gone West" on his annual vacation.

Chief of Police Dodd is fishing at Lake Champlain and taking the only recreation of the kind he has had during five years of service on the "force."

Mr. Edward Nelson, the popular and accommodating ticket agent at this station of the C. R. R., is spending two weeks at Budd's Lake. This vacation is his first in six years.

Ex-Judge George P. Suydam spent Saturday in Plainfield, looking and feeling much better than he has for many years, although still obliged to carry his arm in a sling.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius K. Compton left on Tuesday for a visit to Asbury Park, sensibly choosing the present enjoyable weather rather than the uncomfortable hot days of midsummer.

Mr. Aaron Kline of Plainfield spent Sunday of last week in Lebanon from whence he had "his baggage checked for Troy." He returned from the latter place, subsequently, much charmed with the city and its ladies.

Mr. M. Estil attended church in Clinton, N. J., Sunday the 3d inst., which fact will be a surprise to his acquaintances. Not because he attended church, however, but that he should stray so far from a certain Plainfield attraction.

Mr. Albert F. Randolph, for so many years the faithful janitor of our Public school buildings, having become quite ill with brain trouble caused by overwork, was on Thursday morning taken to a private institution for treatment where his speedy recovery is anticipated. He was accompanied by the Rev. A. H. Lewis and School Commissioner Babcock. His recent position is now being filled by Henry Hamilton the Janitor of the Council.

Mrs. Sally Line Wilcox, widow of Jno. Wilcox, died at her late residence in New Providence, on Sunday night, in the 91st year of her age. The deceased was the mother of eight children, all of whom are living and one of which is Mrs. Lyman Spencer of North Plainfield. A most remarkable feature of the funeral, which was largely attended, was the presence of great-great-grand-children of the deceased.

Tasting The Tender Turtle.

A number of invited guests gathered at Blatz's Hotel on Somerset street last Monday evening, and thoroughly enjoyed a turtle-supper gotten up by the bountiful host. The turtle, caught by Mr. Quaker Vail, was served in the best style and the accompanying refreshments were just off the ice. A very pleasant occasion resulted.

The Diocesan Convention.

From the recently published journal of the proceedings of the Diocesan Convention, the following facts are taken: Number of clergy, 99; churches and missions, 102; Presbyters ordained, 3; baptisms, adults, 166; children, 977; total, 1,143; confirmations, 635; communicants, 7,929; Sunday school teachers, 805; scholars, 7,602; offerings, $198,075.63. The standing committee is composed of Revs. Alfred Stubbs, D. D., Levi W. Norton, Jos. F. Garrison, D. D., Nathaniel Pettit and Messrs. Abraham Browning, R. S. Conover, Samuel K. Wilson and McKean Swift. Bishop Scarborough is now in the eighth year of his episcopate. The diocese is composed of fourteen counties in this State, the other seven constitute the Northern Diocese. The next meeting of the convention will be held in St. Paul's Church, Camden, on the Tuesday after the first Sunday in May, 1883.

State Agricultural Society.

The Twenty-fourth annual Exhibition of the State Agricultural Society will be opened on the Society's grounds at Waverly Park, on Monday, the 18th inst., and continue five days. The Society has a prosperous career since its reorganization in 1868, when it selected a permanent location on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, half way between Newark and Elizabeth, and only eleven miles from New York. The Society's success in gaining popularity with the farmers of our own as well as the bordering States is largely owing to the liberal and progressive policy of its directors and officers toward the exhibitors and visitors to each annual exhibition. One very important object the officers of this Society have always endeavored to attain—that is, to build up, on a firm and healthy basis, every department or branch of husbandry, so that farmers visiting the annual exhibition could see not only fine horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, but also the best products of the soil, as well as all the improved labor-saving implements and machinery which are used by the most successful and progressive husbandmen. By following this policy, the growth in each department has been uniform, and the increase more than satisfactory, as may be seen by referring to the entry department, in which, in 1872, the total in all classes was 1,303, and last year (1881) reached 5,364. This is a flattering recognition and endorsement by exhibitors of the policy of the Society, while the increase in the number of visitors makes it still more so. Excursion trains from different parts of the State will be run to the fair grounds.

A New Source of Delight.

One of the most delightful works issued in many a day is the "Treasury of Song," Prof. D. H. Morrison, editor, Hubbard Brothers, Publishers. It would be difficult to detail all the merits and beauties of a book so full of creations that touch the heart and revive memories common to all. The old and familiar songs that have been dear to every home and the brightest, sweetest, new songs that are becoming immensely popular, are here found grouped together in a most beautiful book for the parlor table. The work will give more joy than a hundred concerts or operas, for it comes daily into the family, where all can enjoy it, and where such a book has long been wanted.

This collection embodies the widest diversity in the character of its contents, including compositions which are praiseful, patriotic, martial, descriptive, didactic, sentimental, humorous, pathetic, and devotional. It is believed that no phase of sentiment, and no set of circumstances, will fail to be appropriately met in the use of this book. Because of this splendid fullness, all the inmates of the home, from grandfather to baby pet, may feel that the music of the home circle is truly a feast of fat things. There is not a song in the entire collection that could be omitted without marring the completeness of the book. Indeed, the world's greatest basso, M. W. Whitney, of Boston, gives it his "cordial endorsement . . . as a most desirable book for the home circle." His opinion is concurred in by multitudes of equally eminent musicians.

Dr. J. H. Vincent, Superintendent of the great Chautauqua Assembly School, was so pleased with this book that he secured three copies as prizes at the competitive Normal examination of that institution.

Mr. Clark's Proposition.

Mr. L. E. Clark has made a communication to the Council in relation to the claims of the city against him.

Among other things he requires "that all the proceedings which have already been commenced in Court as against me shall be immediately withdrawn, and the recognizance given for my appearance at Court cancelled."

Mr. Clark having been arrested upon a complaint made by the Mayor of the city charging him with unlawfully detaining a sum of money exceeding $6,000 belonging to the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield, and waving examination was held in the sum of $5,000 to appear at the next Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery, to be held at the city of Elizabeth on the first Tuesday of October next and not depart the said court without leave.

Who can cancel this recognizance? Would not Judge Van Syckle say that he acquires no jurisdiction until a bill of indictment has been found against Mr. Clark? The Justice has exhausted his powers, and his papers have been doubtless filed with the Prosecutor of the Pleas.

But one course remains—the examination of the charge by the Grand Jury. If sufficient testimony is presented satisfying them of Mr. Clark's criminality, they will find an indictment. If unsatisfied, Mr. Clark will go free and his recognizance be cancelled.

If Mr. Clark's claim that his accounts are correct is true, the proceedings now against him will in the end establish such a fact. Consequently we cannot believe that he has any cause of complaint, and fail to see the necessity of the proposition he has made. Settling the matter in the way he suggests merely relieves him of any risk of imprisonment—but there is no such risk unless the criminal suit is justifiable. Therefore there is no advantage to be gained, unless an advantage that—if it exists—should not be secured.

One Year Ago.

Tuesday morning Becker's dye-works, in the rear of Perrine's hat factory on Front street, was burned and also an adjoining barn occupied by Holmes the expressman.

A New Bridge.

The Committees empowered from the Union and Somerset Counties Boards of Freeholders, have awarded to ex-Postmaster Wallace Vail of this city the contract for building a wooden truss bridge at Leland avenue. It is to be the same as the one just finished at Terrill Road and to cost $475.

Base Ball.

The Crescent Base Ball Association's first nine was to play a return game with the Roselle club on Saturday last, but the latter declined the match for some unknown reason. A practice game was had instead, wherein a picked nine of the Crescents very emphatically outbatted and outplayed a number of Potter men and their friends.

A Capable Choir.

So much is frequently said in just praise of the singing of the choir of the Crescent avenue Church, that we take pleasure in granting the request of a correspondent and publishing the names of the members. They are as follows: Sopranos, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Cozzens, Miss Alice Holmes, Miss Lillie Newman. Contraltos, Miss Jennie Demarest, Mrs. S. R. Struthers, Miss Clara O. Dunn. Tenors, Messrs S. R. Struthers and Edw. Ryder. Bassos, Messrs A. J. Gavett and H. J. Thorne.

The Place to Stay.

Those whom business or pleasure may call to Hunterdon County and who find themselves in the vicinity of Clinton without food or shelter, we would most heartily recommend to the courteous and generous care of Mr. J. B. Weller, proprietor of the Union House, in that beautiful little city. The accommodations of the hotel are perfect in every particular, the table is bountifully supplied and so completely comfortable is the guest's stay that thorough satisfaction is the result.

The W. C. T. U. and the Fair.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are completing their plans for a temperance lunch tent at the County Fair week after next. They hope, by securing as far as possible donations of provisions, to raise funds to aid in carrying on their work the coming Winter in the Band of Hope, the Holly Tree Inn (which is not self-supporting) the distribution of temperance literature, and to enlarge their labors in other ways. In addition to the lunch tent they propose to have a "resting tent" and to make it as attractive as possible.

Quite A Catch.

Mr. Peter Garretson, East Millstone, on Wednesday morning, caught in the Millstone river three bass which weighed 7½ pounds, and in the afternoon the same gentleman caught four more which tipped the scales at 8½ lbs.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

This Peter Garretson is the same who carried on the butchering business with I. D. Ten Eyck, in this city recently. He follows the same avocation in East Millstone now, we believe, and according to the above item he has also gone into the wholesale fish business.

An Expedition Ended with Expedition.

A butcher, a carpenter, a gardener, and a bar-tender started from the corner of Front and Somerset streets, Saturday evening, for Perth Amboy, intending to leave that place early the next morning on a fishing expedition. Just after Plainfield's limits were passed the quartette fell fast asleep, and the horse taking a turn around at Pump-town came back to this city. Suddenly awakening as the vehicle came to a halt, one of the party roused the other with the advice to "brace up, we're in Metuchen;" but all were indescribably surprised on opening their eyes, by the reflection of the colored lights in Shaw's Pharmacy.

Republican Primaries.

Very little enthusiasm was displayed in the primaries held by the Republicans of Plainfield on Tuesday evening, to elect delegates to the Congressional Convention at New Brunswick to-day. The attendance in each ward was small, and the entire harmony that prevailed was only exceeded by that of the Democratic primary the preceding week. The following were elected delegates:

First Ward—D. W. Littell and George M. Stiles.

Second Ward—W. S. Graham and H. A. Thorn.

Third Ward—M. W. Tyler, J. A. Hubbard and O. B. Leonard.

Fourth Ward—Frank C. Green, W. W. Coriell and J. B. Miller.

The Right Way.

The suggestion of Councilman Depew at the meeting of Monday evening, to the effect that some arrangement should be made whereby bills could be audited in spite of the unavoidable absence of the majority of the Auditing committee, is creditable to that gentleman and should be at once acted upon by President Rushmore. As Mr. Robert Simpson will not be able to attend to his duties on the Committee for some time, let Mr. Gardner be put in his place as an auditor and the claims may be passed to payment without delay. Messrs. John Simpson and Gardner are always present at the Council meetings, and if the change suggested is made this deferring of payments that Mr. Depew regrets, would be obviated.

Democratic Congressional Delegates.

The Democratic primary for the purpose of electing delegates to the Congressional Convention at Freehold, was held at the rooms of the Democratic Association on Front street, over Peck's store, at eight o'clock on Friday evening last. Although over one hundred voters of the party were noticed outside of the rooms at the time, but nineteen assembled when the meeting was called to order by chairman James E. Martine. Mr. L. F. Wadsworth acted as Secretary. Wm. B. Maxson, Esq., offered a resolution instructing the delegates to vote for a Union county candidate for the nomination, first, last and all the time. This was amended by Mr. Wadsworth, substituting the word request for instruct, and unanimously carried. Messrs. John Bloomfield, Walter L. Hetfield, Daniel J. Marshall, James Clark, W. H. Warner and Vincent L. Frame were nominated as delegates and elected by acclamation. On motion the delegates were empowered to fill any vacancy in their number, and the meeting adjourned.

Closing the Season.

During Thursday afternoon and evening of last week, the Plainfield Saengerbund closed the season of summer entertainments by a grand picnic and dance in Wooden's Grove, which was attended by a large number of the Association's friends and delegations from other singing societies of the State. The affair which was the fourth Annual given by the Saengerbund, was a success in every particular, largely due to the efforts of the Committee of Arrangements—Messrs Adolph Korman, W. Feibel, M. Drootz, H. Duderstadt and G. Brenner. The dancing was under the usual able management of Mr. Edwin Bachman, and was the most enjoyable feature of the occasion. Among the visitors present were three stage loads of members of the Aurora Singing Society of New Brunswick, all wearing a uniform consisting of a white plug hat and cane. Nothing occurred during the day or night to mar the general pleasure of all, and the affair will be long remembered with gratification by every one that attended.

Mr. Carl Feininger.

This excellent violinist and estimable gentleman, after a visit of two weeks to his parents in this city, has returned to New York. During his visit we enjoyed several opportunities of hearing him play and were enabled to study his style. In our opinion he is a violinist of remarkable powers. Endowed by nature with great talents, he has conscientiously and laboriously cultivated them, and his development is as remarkable as his genius. He is a true artist in every sense of the word. His high moral traits are so marked, his principles so fixed, his perceptions so clear and his taste so refined that he abhors anything like trickery and relies solely upon his own merits. His tone is broad, pure and sympathetic, his bowing majestic and his technique strong, but delicate and accurate. He possesses wonderful versatility and is capable of illustrating the different schools of violin playing. His musical knowledge is profound and comprehensive, his judgment mature, his imagination bright. As a composer, he ranks very high. Many of his works are known and appreciated in Europe. Concerning one of his recent symphonic works, Liszt speaks in the most complimentary terms. In addition to his musical attainments Mr. Feininger possesses much varied information and he is a gentleman of easy and refined manners, generous, frank, accommodating—wholly devoid of egotism. Columbia is really proud of her gifted son. It is generally regretted that his stay was so short. We are gratified to say there is a probability of his returning later in the season, in company with his accomplished wife.—Columbia (S. C.) Register.

Woman's Work in the Young Men's Christian Association.

BY A WATERTOWN LADY.

Women's work in the interest of the Young Men's Christian Association, is just beginning to find a place in the discussions of that organization. It has many advocates, and will, perhaps, find some opponents among the conservative portion of the Association, who deprecate change.

Having had some experience in the organizing and working of a "woman's auxiliary," which has been in successful operation for more than a year, may I be allowed to give your readers some idea of its purpose and plan, and some reasons why such an organization may be a useful adjunct in association work?

It has been found necessary for some time, to ask the assistance of women in carrying out the plans of the Association. To use a much abused term, the aesthetic part of the work, required the taste and tact of women, and this has been secured by appointing committees of women for special service, to act under and in accord with the Board of Managers; but of course, their interest and attention was but temporary, and ceased when the work for which they were especially appointed closed.

I think it was the need of the actual cooperation of christian women and a necessity for some means of arousing a new interest in Association work, that led the Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, in Watertown, to call together a number of women from the different church organizations, and ask them to form a society which should be separate and distinct from, and yet auxiliary to the Board of Managers. They were to elect their own officers, manage their own funds, and be in every respect, independent of the Young Men's Christian Association, while their object was to promote the interest of that organization in every way.

The auxiliary has been in operation one year, and at the annual meeting, recently held, it was found that they had raised nearly a thousand dollars, which has been expended in furnishing the new rooms of the Association, and in assisting in paying a debt resting upon that institution, and this has been done in a quiet unostentatious way, the meetings have been wonderfully harmonious, and all the members seeming to be actuated by christian motives, have worked in such perfect unity that it has rendered the work pleasant and comparatively easy. But I believe these pecuniary results to be the least valuable of the benefits to be derived from such an organization.

Women are naturally zealous and enthusiastic, and of necessity, infuse some of their zeal and enthusiasm into those with whom they come in contact, and by methods and plans, entirely unlike those of men, reach sympathies, awaken inquiries, and bring into activity resources that would never be reached by the more cool and perhaps, better matured system used by men, but which once quickened and brought into activity, are potent for good. All will concede that it is the gentle ministrations and watchful tenderness of woman that renders the home circle attractive, and makes it so powerful an influence for good; and as her sphere of influence widens, we see its effect in society, softening and refining the character of those with whom she comes in contact. It is well known that the church depends largely for its success, upon the zeal, tact and energy of the women connected with it; and surely, in the endeavor to win young men from haunts of vice, to provide home-like and attractive rooms, where they may find innocent companionship and amusement, and be lead by christian watchfulness and care, into the ways of virtue and holiness, it seems eminently fitting that earnest and efficient aid should be rendered by mothers and sisters, whose hearts are overflowing with love and anxious care for sons and brothers, and naturally go out in sympathy for those who have no mothers and sisters to care for them, and are without the elevating and refining influences of christian homes, or the restraining, fostering care a church gives its children.

But it may be said "we concede all this, but why not let her assist in the old way in the form of subordinate committees, making them permanent, if thought desirable, but answerable to the Board of Managers." I think to any candid person the "new departure" will commend itself as best. Women, as I have said before, work by methods peculiar to themselves, and although they may not be strictly parliamentary, or such as would commend them to male minds, still they are their own, and they can work to better advantage under them than when hampered by rules made for them by men. If they acted under the Board of Managers, they would be simply women doing the work of men, while under the new order of things, they are exercising an entirely new set of ideas, faculties and talents which are supplemental to, and the complement of those already in operation by the Board of Managers, and thus the resources of the Association are doubled, and its usefulness greatly augmented.

I believe this is a work that will grow; that these auxiliaries, which are rapidly springing up, will become a powerful influence in Association work; that they will find new avenues of usefulness, and press on to enlarge plans for work in this wide field. This influence will be reflex, and the banding together of christian women of every creed in common work for the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth, and the benefit, both temporal and spiritual, of their fellow creatures, will be found resulting in blessing in their own hearts and lives, giving them broader and more liberal views of the christian life, fostering in them a love for all who call themselves christians, and a more earnest desire to benefit those who have no one to care for their souls; stimulating to acts of self-denial for the good of others, and finding the reward that duty well performed always brings, a strengthening and purifying of the soul, until those duties which seemed a heavy cross to be born patiently, will come to be privileges, accepted joyfully and willingly.

Allow me one word as to the name of these organizations. Let them be called "Woman's" not "Ladies' Auxiliaries." I notice that in all reports of them, they are spoken of as "Ladies' Auxiliaries. Now the good old Saxon word woman, contains all that is implied in lady. It is a term made dear to us by the sweetest associations of our lives. We learn to love and reverence it in early childhood as the sweet voice of a mother told us ever welcome stories of the saintly women of the Bible, as we heard the history of the tender loving Ruth, the earnest, self-sacrificing Hannah, and Mary the sweet virgin mother of our ever blessed Lord; these were all women, as were all those female saints who ministered to our Savior during his life of hardship while on earth, who were and it seems as though those who profess to follow His footsteps and minister in His name, to His neglected children, should retain that ancient title, around which cluster a world of tender memories, for with it we associate the idea of home, with its fond recollections, and of mother which is to us the synonym for all that is excellent and lovely.—Chicago Watchman.

Fanwood Delegates.

At the meeting held for the purpose during Friday evening of last week at Scotch Plains, the following were elected as delegates to the different conventions, from the Township of Fanwood—Mr. C. W. L. Martine acting as Chairman and Wm. N. Pangborn as Secretary of the meeting.

Congressional delegates—Joseph A. Patterson and C. W. L. Martine.

County delegates—Thos. Nichol and Wm. N. Pangborn.

Assembly delegates—Jos. A. Baker and Jas. Lambert.

Somerset County Board of Assessors.

This board met at the Court House at Somerville, on Monday, the 4th inst., and organized by the appointment of William S. Potter of Bridgewater, as chairman, and Isaac Brokaw of North Plainfield, as secretary. The tables given below are taken from the schedules prepared. The valuations of real estate vary little from last year, except in Bridgewater township, where, owing to the erection of new buildings in the borough district of Bound Brook within the past year, the value of real estate is somewhat enhanced. There is an aggregate increase in the valuation of $200,000, caused either by a gain in personal property or a decrease in the amount of indebtedness deducted.

COM'S FROM OFFICERS OF THE CITY.

The clerk read the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 8, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield;

GENTLEMEN: The serious complications of the city and township accounts, and the duties devolving on the present municipal authorities of Plainfield, in regard to both civil and criminal proceedings, are such as to require at once prudence and vigor. In the discharge of my own duties I am desirous that the Common Council should be kept fully informed, and should give their earnest concurrence in the steps taken. Under the general provisions of the charter and ordinances I find no great difficulty in dealing with such questions as daily arise, but I think that in this business it would be well for you to adopt a specific resolution, calling on the Mayor and the Corporation Counsel to take such proceedings as may be found necessary (in the way of bringing suits or otherwise) against any parties found to be unlawfully holding or keeping back money, books or other property belonging to the city, or to any of the departments or officers as such. I shall hope, in all these matters, to advise with your special committee, as well as with the counsel engaged.

A single illustration of the complications rendering it now and then difficult to fix the responsibility on the party delinquent may be in point.

I called the attention of Mr. Buck (the expert accountant employed by your committee) to an item of $1,542.02 for which Jos. B. Coward claimed credit, and asked Mr. Buck if he had seen the voucher. He replied in the negative, this voucher having been promised but not presented some months before, when others were shown. At my request Mr. Buck at once applied again for the voucher, and it was exhibited. It was a check drawn by Mr. Coward, to order of bank, for credit of Board of Education, and appeared to have gone through bank and to have been credited to the Board. The Board, however, were found to be unaware of any money paid for their credit by Mr. Coward. A large amount and a smaller one appeared on the statement of the Board's expert to have been credited to L. E. Clark, Collector, on or about the day of the check's date. For these Mr. Clark held and claimed receipt. Upon a careful analysis of these credits, the item of $1,542.02 was found included. Thus both of these men had claimed credit for this identical item, not as against each other, but both as against the city. This, of course, (to which ever the credit were given) increases the deficiency already reported. A similar case has appeared in the state and county items. I need not explain how such bookkeeping and management, extending back through a period of years, gives rise to perplexing questions and painful duties; but I trust and believe that your honorable body will continue to give your support to such effort as will at least enable us to get as near as possible to the "bottom facts," and will tend toward equal justice to all concerned. I further suggest that it may be in order for you to direct a specific demand on Mr. Coward for interest due on the sum he paid the City Treasurer.

Very respectfully,
L. V. F. RANDOLPH, Mayor.

On motion of Mr Ginna, laid on the table for future action.

Also the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 11, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—On the 9th inst., I prepared for your consideration, a statement of certain additional facts in relation to the deficiency in the tax accounts, and asked for certain further action in this connection. Before taking this action however, it may be advisable for you to consider (or to refer to your special committee for further consideration) a letter from L. E. Clark, which I have received this afternoon and which I enclose herewith. The "difference" to which Mr. Clark refers, may be stated in general as follows: The first statement from him showed total receipts during the term of his collectorship, about $512,000. It having been proved to him that one of the integers of these receipts should be, say, 50,000 instead of say 44,000, as by him set down, he in his second statement, increased the amount of his receipts to about $518,000, and increased his disbursements in a sum nearly equal. A careful analysis of these disbursements, shows that he claimed about $6,000 more than he has been able to prove by vouchers or otherwise. In his first statement (allowing for a mistake of $100 in the additions) his receipts appeared to be in excess of his payments $1,66[illegible]. In his second statement, his receipts appeared to be in excess of his payments $125.79. We make his receipts in excess of his payments over $6,000; and besides this, there is an aggregate of about $11,000, which, indeed, in some considerable part may constitute a legitimate charge against the city, but which is more or less open to question. The debit balance against Clark thus stands for the present at about $17,000. It does not appear that the Collector had any right (not being a disbursing officer under the law) to pay the sums comprising the $11,000, and the items themselves must still be subject to proper scrutiny, before they can be allowed. Notwithstanding these facts, the communication of Mr. Clark should have careful consideration before it is rejected. One of the very important duties we have to perform is, to secure what is due to the city, and if the acceptance of a definite undertaking that the deficiency shall be made good is a legal and proper thing for us to do, in connection with the suggestions made in the accompanying note, it may be wise for us to take such an opportunity. But, having only just received the communication from Mr. Clark, and having had no opportunity to confer with any city officer, or with counsel, on the subject, I recommend its reference for the present and trust that the council will adjourn until the middle of the week for further action.

I venture however to suggest, that, inasmuch as some portion of the deficiency above mentioned may possibly be found chargeable on another person or on other persons, any settlement (if any is in order) ought to have reference to the whole deficiency arising during Clark's term, and not to a part of it. The detention of any moneys belonging to the city, by whomsoever it is done, must render the delinquent liable to further proceedings.

Very Respectfully,
L. V. F. RANDOLPH, Mayor.

And this accompanying communication:

Hon. L. V. F. RANDOLPH,
Mayor of Plainfield, N. J.:

Whereas, There appears a difference between the report of the accountant in his examination of the accounts of the city during my term as Collector, and my own account as reported, and desiring an amicable settlement of these differences, providing they do so exist, I respectfully submit the following propositions, viz.:

First. That I shall have the privilege of appointing an auditor for the examination of the accounts on my own behalf, and in connection with an auditor appointed by the city in its behalf, and these two auditors to choose and appoint a third auditor in case they may require him to settle any disputed point that may arise between the two first chosen; and when the said examination is completed, and a report presented to the Mayor of the city of Plainfield, signed by two said auditors and properly attested, it shall be considered as binding on the city and myself, both then and thereafter, without further recourse.

Second. That for the purpose of securing to the city the payment of any indebtedness which may be determined by said auditors to exist against me, I do agree that said amount shall be paid over to the city within ten days from the date of the said auditors' final report; and for the faithful performance of this agreement do hereby offer as guarantee the following bond, to wit:

In consideration of [illegible] to be paid over to the Treasurer of the city of Plainfield, [illegible] of said Clark, the Collector of the city of Plainfield, the full amount of [illegible] in accordance with the propositions of said Clark as above set forth, and subject to the conditions therein as stated.

Signed: [illegible]

Third. This agreement will only be considered binding upon consideration that all the proceedings which have already been commenced in court as against me shall be immediately withdrawn, and the recognizance given for my appearance at court cancelled, and that no further action shall be taken or had against me pending the examination and report of said auditors, nor during the ten days thereafter, as recited in said agreement heretofore.

Respectfully submitted,
L. E. CLARK.

Plainfield, Sept. 6, 1882.

On motion of Mr. Thompson, both communications were referred to the Special Committee on the late Collector's accounts, with a request for its speedy report.

The President presented a com. from Deputy Tax Collector Moore asking that his rate of compensation be definitely fixed. And also requesting that storage room be secured for such personal property as may be levied upon.

Mr. Ginna considered that the resolution passed at a previous meeting fixing the fees of W. N. Pangborn, regulated Moore's compensation. He moved that the Laws Com. be empowered to secure such storage room as might in its judgment be considered necessary.

Seconded by Mr. Thompson, and carried. All aye.

On motion, warrants ordered drawn. All aye.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

Mr. Depew spoke earnestly in relation to arranging some way of overcoming the difficulty of passing bills for payment in the absence of two members of Aud. Com. He thought that if the President could not act a change of the rules should be made whereby a member of another committee might serve as an auditor.

Mr. Ginna called up the nine-year old claim of Berry & Thorn ($80.16) ordered paid by the Council at a previous meeting.

On motion referred to Aud. Com.

Mr. Ginna moved that the Laws Com. be empowered to purchase a safe for the keeping of the minutes, papers and other documents of the Council at a cost not exceeding $100.

Carried, all aye.

The Council adjourned until Thursday evening, the 14th inst.

MALARIA
SURE CURE

[illegible], N. J., July 24, 1882.
[illegible]
DEAR Sirs:—Having used your Titsworth's Sure Cure, and being entirely cured by it, I feel that its merits should be acknowledged. I had a very severe attack of Chills and Fever, "Titsworth's Sure Cure for Malaria" was recommended to me, and as nothing else seemed to help me, I used that. [illegible] I am confident that "Titsworth's Sure Cure" will cure when nothing else will, and I would heartily recommend it to any one suffering from this disease. If they suffer after knowing of this remedy it is their own fault.
Wishing you and your medicine success, I remain,
Yours Very Respectfully,

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

AN INFERIOR HORSE.

The writer met the jockey Rotherford while dining at the Winter palace in St. Petersburg a short time after their huge sporting wrangle, and, in the course of a conversation on turf matters, the astute prodder of horse-flesh said, with a childlike and ingenuous smile:

"Would you like to know the dead inside facts as to how that race was won?"

"Why, you rode the best horse, didn't you?" we asked.

"Not a bit of it," replied the jockey, with a grin. "The fact was that Rotherford was only about the fourth choice and was not rated more than eighth or ninth in the pools. True Blue, Katy Pease and Thad Stevens all had the call over Ruthy. But it happened that my horse was a 'boiler,' and to steady him and prevent his flying the track I put blinders and goggles on him. You noticed them, I suppose?"

"There were two horses rigged that way," we replied.

"Exactly; Stevens was a nervous critter also, and as soon as his trainer saw how the goggles steadied my horse he put 'em on Thad too. The day before the race a big idea occurred to me. I got a couple of pairs of magnifying lenses and quietly put 'em in place of the plain glasses in the goggles of both horses. Catch on to the idea?"

"Well, partly."

"The only difference was that in Stevens' bridles I fastened the glasses with the bulge inside, so as to make them diminishing glasses, don't you see?"

"Like looking through the wrong end of an opera glass, eh?"

"Exactly. The result was that, while Ruthetford was encouraged all the way by the course seeming only a couple of hundred yards long, the quarter flags appeared ten miles apart to Stevens. You see, a horse can be discouraged just as well as a man."

"Great scheme, that."

"Well, I should smile. Ruthy thought he was in for a little quarter race, and it kept up his heart, so that when he had nearly done the last mile and swung into the homestretch, and I called on him to let out his last link, he thought the Judges' stand was right under his nose, so he came home like an express train on a down grade; but Stevens, who thought he had about fifteen miles further to go, went all to pieces, as you remember, and almost lay down on the track, he was so mentally caved in, as it were."

FEMININE PARAGRAPHS.

Inflated skirts are looming up.

Plush is the trimming for the next season.

Yellow maintains its sway as a favorite color.

Mountain suits and fatigue costumes are very short.

The waists of all dresses are shorter than they have been for some years.

White with lemon color is one of the fashionable combinations for Summer dresses.

Immense hats of drawn or shirred crape, mull and veiling are worn at European seaside resorts.

Terra cotta silk mitts with silk stockings of the same shade are now worn with light muslin dresses.

White nainsook trimmed with wide and narrow Hamburg embroidery gives a charming Summer toilet.

One of the prettiest "wash" goods for dress wear is "Zephyr lawn." The designs are handsome and novel in tone.

Some of the newest paniers on imported dresses are formed of great pleats that stand out as if they were wired.

Indian pongee is the foundation for much decorative needlework for covering bureaus and buffets, and for table covers.

The redingote suit, with its long ample overdress, is a relief to the eye now that paniers and drapery have become so common.

Nothing more hideous can be conceived than the bouffant tournures of crinoline which French modistes are bringing in vogue.

Black failles, satins, poplins, watered silk, and also thinner materials, such as grenadines, silk gauzes, and tulle, are all in high fashion.

Young ladies in Paris dress almost entirely in white costumes. When color is worn it is seen upon the sash, or in the floral garniture.

It is the height of fashion to trim crevette-pink surah dresses with twine lace almost as coarse as the macrame lace used for upholstery.

It is proposed that ladies shall adopt the Turkish style of wearing their veils next Winter—that is, over the mouth, chin and nose instead of the eyes.

White dresses have occasionally the entire skirt covered with narrow flounces of Oriental lace. The basque is then trimmed with lace ruffles and cascades.

Large collarettes and shoulder capes of lace and embroidery are much worn. A new fancy is to decorate them profusely all around with hoops of satin.

White Chudda dresses, with old blue or dull red velvet collar and cuffs are worn at Summer hotels by ladies whose fair complexion will admit such a trying toilet.

Kensington crape is the new cotton for needle women to embroider. It is ornamented with fruit, leaves and flowers, done in outline stitches on curtains, aprons, tidies, &c.

Flowered sateens are made up prettily with flounces, tunic and fichu, or small cape of a plain color matching the ground. The ruffles of the sleeves are also of the plain color.

Blue with brown is a fashionable contrast in imported dresses. A pale blue foulard with dark brown figures trimmed with bows of brown velvet ribbon is one of the prettiest of the season.

The new Grenada blonde has the figures of Spanish lace on a very thin grenadine ground. It is made up over colored satin of contrasting color—such as black over red or white over yellow.

THE annual re-union of the 14th N. J. Volunteers will be held in Jamesburgh on September 19th, the anniversary of the battle of Winchester.

The surveyors employed in running the boundary line between New York and New Jersey and erecting boundary monuments, have discovered that eight square miles of land, now in Orange county, New York, really belong to Sussex county, New Jersey.

A large tree felled on a farm at New Mexico, Mo., measured nine feet through near the ground, was 110 feet high, the first limb growing at a height of thirty feet from the base. The tree was cut up into 800 rails, 300 fence posts, and 60 cords of fire wood.

Kind words are bright flowers of earthly existence; use them, and especially around the fireside circle. They are the jewels beyond price, and powerful to heal the wounded heart and make the weighed-down spirit glad.

Like flakes of snow that fall upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character.

Bad thoughts, if cherished, blight virtue, destroy purity, and undermine the stablest foundations of character. They are like rot in timber; like rust in iron. They eat into the man. And when the process has gone on for awhile, and there comes the stress of an unlooked temptation, down they go into a mass of ruin.

UPSET SALE!

Commenced This Week and Gives Promise of Great Success.

Scotch people and old-time folks all know what is the meaning of "upset sale." It is a term used when things are to be sold out to close estates, partnerships or corporations.

I propose a sale of this nature. The prosperous season so far this year, the largest I ever had, encourages me to

Nothing stops me in executing the right plans, and if the prices must be cut down to gather the people

DOWN GO THE PRICES!

The people have treated me generously for many years and I am satisfied even though I do sacrifice my profits one month.

IN A NUTSHELL, THIS IS IT!

The practical point of all this is a radical reduction in prices from August first. They are cut, some ten, some twenty, some thirty per cent., and some on goods prepared specially for this sale, not at all. My great desire is to get the people to examine the goods and see the reality of the reductions.

First.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

FLIRTATION.

SUMMER.

Two summer weeks—ah, short the time!
How swift the sweet days roll!
Then every morning brought a bow,
And every night a stroll.

These two were never seen apart,
No matter what the weather,
For rain and shine, in doors or out,
But brought these two together.

WINTER.

On Boston street they meet and pass—
A bow, and that is all.
Says she, "The fool I met at Newport—
Hope he won't come to call."

He lifts his hat and lifts his head,
Politeness is the fashion.
Says he, "By Jove, I've seen that girl,
I wonder where I met her?"

GROWING OLD.

BY [illegible]

At six—I well remember when—
I fancied all folks old at ten;

But when I turned my first decade,
Fifteen appeared more truly staid.

But when the fifteenth round I'd run,
I thought none old till twenty-one.

Then oddly, when I'd reach that age,
I held that thirty made men sage.

But when my thirtieth year was told,
I said: "At twoscore men grow old."

Yet twoscore came and found me thrifty,
And so I drew the line at fifty.

But when I reached that age I swore
None could be old until threescore;

And here I am at sixty now,
As young as when at six, I trow!

'Tis true, my hair is somewhat gray,
And that I use a cane to-day;

'Tis true, [illegible]
[illegible] "grandpa," when they speak to me;

But, bless your soul, I'm young as when
I thought all people old at ten;

Perhaps a little wiser grown—
Perhaps some old illusions flown;

But wond'ring still, while years have rolled,
When is it that a man grows old?

New York Clipper.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE TELL-TALE CHIMNEY.

BY F. S.

It was the time of the vintage in Mad. Yes, but where is Mad? I did not know myself until lately, but this much I am certain of, that a delicious wine is made from the grapes which grow on the mountain sides of Mad, and, besides that, there is a mineral spring of sulphur water in this otherwise unimportant metropolis of Hegyalya; but these two facts are all I know of the Mad of to-day.

This story opens at the ball, on the third day of the festival, in the year 18—. The sun had long set behind the blue green tops of the vine-covered mountains, and night approached; but the ball-room was as bright as day, illuminated by numberless wax-lights from chandeliers and candelabra, which was reflected from the mirrored walls, and flashed from jewels of immense worth in the orders worn on the breasts of brave men, in the curls on the snow-white shoulders and arms of beautiful women. Intoxicating music sounded through the large rooms, and the dazzling gold and silver embroideries, costly laces, fresh, fragrant flowers, glistening silks, clear ringing laughter, little dancing feet, and brilliant eyes—all combined to form a scene worthy of the "Arabian Nights."

Only one person seemed unmoved by this splendor. He was a young cavalier, who, for some time, had been resting against a pillar, and who appeared tired of following with his eyes the whirling, distracting dance. At last he turned away, and passed through the open glass door on the vine-covered terrace. He leaned against the wooden balustrade, and looked thoughtfully over to the hills of Saros-Patak, on whose slopes, five hundred years ago, the first grapes in Hegyalja had ripened, and which now stood out in bold relief against the evening sky. He did not remain alone, however, for in a few moments a friend—the slender Bela—wiping his forehead, after the heating dance, came toward him.

"Ha! So pensive, Andrassy?" he exclaimed, putting his hand on his friend's arm.

"I am resting. I have done all that duty requires of me. And, anyway, the whole thing tires me."

"Heavens, man! Traitor!" replied the other with affected astonishment. "The ball in Mad tires you! Look around you again. Where in the world could you find so many beautiful women, bright eyes, and pretty feet as here?"

"Nowhere."

"And, nevertheless, it tires you?"

"As I have already said."

"I don't believe it," laughed Count Bela. Carl Andrassy shrugged his shoulders, and turned away in a dejected manner.

"Now, I'll tell you what's the matter with you," said Bela.

"You make me curious."

Bela put his mouth to his friend's ear and whispered, laughingly:

"You are in love."

Andrassy drew himself up with great dignity. His black eyes flashed angrily at Bela for a few moments, and he answered, haughtily:

"How does that concern you?"

"You are right there," replied Bela, again laughing. "Your being in love is none of my business, certainly, and I ought to be accustomed to it by this time, as I have seen you so often in that condition during the eight years that I have known you. But still, it would make me very happy to have the pleasure of dancing with Ilka at your wedding soon."

Andrassy smiled.

"You had better do all your dancing here, then, for you will have to wait a long time for my wedding."

Bela looked inquisitively at him.

"We are such good friends," he said. Then in a warmer tone: "Why don't you confide in me?"

"What shall I confide to you?" asked Andrassy, angrily.

"The cause of your ill-temper."

"I have the best temper in the world."

"Don't try to deceive me. I know you too well. You are in trouble."

"Trouble?" said Andrassy, with a loud and [illegible] laugh. "Your imagination must be very fine. What should trouble me?"

"Listen to me," answered Bela, earnestly, "and don't try to deceive me. You remember when we were in Vienna and Pesth you used to come to me, and throwing your sabre and cap carelessly on the table, and yourself on a divan you would explain: 'I am in love!'"

Andrassy frowned.

"What has that to do with the present?" he asked, hastily.

"At this time you were very much enamored of at least half a dozen tolerably pretty women; some were ladies and some were not."

"Well."

"And I laughed over it, because I knew you so well, and I also knew how harmless such infatuations were. While you swore by all the saints in the calendar that you were dead in love——"

"But——"

"But, to-day," continued Bela, unheeding the interruption, "you say nothing, call upon no saints; but, nevertheless, this time you are in love. Your sadness makes me uneasy, because it shows that you are really serious."

"Thank God, you have finished at last," said Andrassy, seemingly amused. "And whom am I in love with, if I may ask? You will pardon my curiosity, I hope."

"Ilka says——"

"Ah! Your information comes from that quarter?"

"Yes. Ilka has noticed that you never take your eyes off Etelka Szapary."

Carl Andrassy had expected this answer, and so did not move a muscle as Bela mentioned Etelka's name, but smiled pleasantly, and said:

"And what else did the pretty mischief say?"

"That you have not danced once with Etelka."

"Ah! And that proves that I am very much in love, does it not?" asked Carl, laughingly.

"Ilka thinks so, and I agree with her."

"Would you consider it another proof if I were to leave this town in a hour, as I have decided to do?"

"Yes," said Bela, positively.

"To the devil with your obstinacy!" muttered Andrassy, becoming excited, and a slight flush mounted to his brown cheeks. He seemed irresolute for some moments, and after casting a searching glance into the room and and twirling his moustache, he finally said:

"Well then—you are right."

"You see," said Bela, triumphantly, and he took Andrassy's arm. "But come and tell me all about it."

"What good would that do?" answered Carl.

"Perhaps I can help you."

Andrassy shrugged his shoulders in silence.

"I am distantly related to the Szaparys," said Bela.

"So am I."

"The mother likes me."

"She doesn't like me. I am not economical enough to please her. But the mother's opinion is of little consequence to me."

"She has the disposal of Etelka's hand, however."

"Of her heart," also angrily replied Andrassy.

"I don't know what to make of you," said Bela, sternly.

"I hardly know what to make of myself. But never mind that, my dear friend," said Andrassy, changing the subject, abruptly. "I am going to leave in an hour; but before I go you will certainly allow me one dance with Ilka?"

"Most willingly."

They re-entered the overheated room together. Bela was slender and of prepossessing appearance, blonde, with gray eyes. Carl Andrassy was a little above the medium size, but with a magnificent figure, which the tight-fitting Hungarian costume set off to great advantage. His face did not belie his origin. His hair was black and curly, and under a broad forehead shone a pair of deep-set, lustrous black eyes. A Roman nose, strong chin, and long beard completed his characteristic appearance, and, although not as striking as his friend Bela, he possessed greater claims to manly beauty.

When Andrassy joined the dancers with Ilka Apongi, Bela hastened to the Countess Szapary, who sat alone, smiling as her eyes followed her daughter who was waltzing.

"Well, how are you enjoying yourself, countess?" asked he.

"Very well, dear cousin. You see Etelka is dancing, and I, as a wall-flower, am enjoying my child's conquests."

At this moment Etelka returned.

"Where is Ilka?" she asked, giving her hand to her cousin.

"She is dancing with Carl Andrassy."

"Ah! with Count Andrassy?" said the beautiful girl, her eyes glancing around the ball-room in search of them. "Are you not jealous?"

"No, indeed," replied Bela, smiling; "not of Carl Andrassy."

His tone of voice and his smile did not please her. She thought they expressed contempt for Carl, and a little wrinkle formed between her two eyebrows as she looked enquiringly at Bela.

"He is my best friend, and—in love."

Etelka Szapary blushed, and, turning away quickly, said: "Then, certainly, you have nothing to fear."

The music ceased and supper was announced.

"I would like some fresh flowers in my hair," said Etelka to her mother. "The heat has withered my roses, and they are almost ready to fall to pieces."

"Well, let's go, then. We'll meet again, cousin."

The mother was a proud, queenly woman. Many persons said that she was very avaricious, but this fact you would never have suspected from her magnificent costumes and trains of cloth-of-gold; but still it was an open secret that she had dismissed the young Esterhazy, and also Gyula Zichy, when they proposed for Etelka's hand, in consequence of their extravagant habits.

Etelka was slender and graceful. She resembled Greuze's picture of Spring in her simple white dress of light silver embroidered silk, cut in the fashion of the day, with a very short waist. She wore pale-blush roses in her hair and at her girdle. Her complexion was fair and delicate, her dark eyebrows were arched, her long, black lashes shadowed large, liquid, earnest eyes, and a smile of happy youth played around her lips.

Bela looked after her, and said, as Andrassy approached: "She is truly charming."

"Farewell, friend," replied Andrassy, giving Bela his hand. "I leave in an hour."

"You are a fool if you don't try your luck before you go."

"You know very well that I am not economical enough, and that is what the Szapary exacts from her son-in-law. Just think of what happened last year, when I, with a special purpose, paid the countess a visit. We were strolling in the garden, and I, thoughtlessly, pulled a plum and threw it away. When the countess saw this she was highly incensed, made me a long speech on economy and prodigality, and said whoever pulls a plum to eat may be economical, but he who pulls one to throw away is a spendthrift, and to a spendthrift she would never give her daughter."

"That's ridiculous."

"I believe her, however; and since Esterhazy and even Gyula Zichy have received the mitten, I shall not ask a refusal."

"You are too proud."

"Etelka, however charming she may be, still has a great fault."

"Her mother?" asked Bela, laughing.

"No."

"What could it be, then?"

"She is the richest heiress in Hungary."

"What a great misfortune!" exclaimed Bela sarcastically.

"Such girls are commonly told that men want to marry them for their money only, and finally they believe it."

"Well, perhaps you are right."

"Good-by. Your fiancée is waiting for you. We meet again next November in Pesth."

The friends shook hands, and while Bela returned to Ilka, Carl Andrassy, making his adieux here and there, left the ball-room and ordered his carriage. He then went to his room, which was on the first floor, to prepare for his journey. While his valet packed his effects, the count filled the little short-stemmed pipe which he was in the habit of smoking, and stretched himself, sighing, on the lounge which stood in front of the immense fire-place.

While puffing thick clouds of smoke, his mind was occupied with Etelka. Dared he risk following the advice of his friend? He would, if he were only sure of Etelka's affection. But, as it was—no, he could not. His pride won the victory. Suddenly he started up out of his reverie.

"Did you say anything?" he asked of the servant, who was busy at the other end of the large room.

"No, my lord."

Andrassy looked perplexed, for he had distinctly heard some one speaking. There it was again. A fresh, melodious, girl's voice asked:

"Are the roses in the right place?"

"Yes, my child. Wait, and I will fasten them again."

Andrassy understood every word. He recognized the two voices immediately, but where did they come from? That riddle was soon solved. The fire-place of his room connected with that of the room above in a manner to allow him to hear distinctly every word that was said. Eagerly listening, he bent his head down to the tell-tale chimney.

"Are you enjoying yourself this evening?"

"Tolerably," answered Etelka.

"Which of the gentlemen do you like best?"

Here was a pause. The count's heart beat violently. He thought that Etelka's answer, which was of so much importance to him, was spoken too softly to be heard. He leaned further over into the fire-place.

"Still——Count Andrassy," she said at last.

He felt like shouting with joy, but continued to listen without moving.

"I do, too," said the mother; "and if he should propose to you?"

Andrassy held his breath.

"Oh, mamma!" she answered, reproachfully. Then, after a little while, she added, sadly: "I don't think of that any more. I don't think that will ever happen."

"But if it did?"

"Oh, then I should be very happy," said Etelka, so softly that Carl Andrassy could scarcely hear it.

He did not wait a moment longer. Springing up, he threw away the extinguished pipe. His cheeks were burning and his eyes glistened, as he stood in front of the mirror to rearrange his toilet. Suddenly he stopped, and struck his forehead. Was he not dreaming? Was it not a delusion?

"Did you hear any one speaking just now?" he asked, turning round to his servant.

"No, my lord," answered the valet, astonished at his master's strange question.

Andrassy returned to the fire-place and listened, but no one was speaking now, he could distinguish no sound. Some one knocked softly. The landlord entered to inform him that his carriage was waiting.

"Who lives on the next floor?" Andrassy asked, excitedly.

"The widowed Countess Szapary," the landlord replied.

"Unharness the horses. We do not leave to-night," commanded the count, and rushed by the astonished man, out of the door. In a quarter of an hour the Countess Szapary appeared at the supper table with an overjoyed pair of pledged lovers.

Thus Count Carl Andrassy obtained his beautiful bride, and their second son, Julius Andrassy, is the celebrated Austrian-Hungarian statesman.

SHOOTING OLD PERKINS.

It is on record that a Michigan editor was once engaged to fight a duel. The affair occurred twenty-five years ago, and was brought about by the journalist making several violent attacks upon the honor and honesty of a member of the Legislature. The Solon first tried the usual way of getting even by buying a horsewhip and hunting the editor, but when he had found him he was knocked down and rolled in the mud. He then sent a formal challenge, and as the editor opened the letter he turned to his two compositors and said:

"Boys, how much matter have you got up for the first page?"

"Three columns," replied the foreman, after measuring up the galleys.

"And we need five. You'll have it all up by noon to-morrow, and by Wednesday night all the inside will be up. Then I'll wet down the paper and make up, and while you're working off the outside I'll run out and shoot old Perkins, who has sent me a challenge."

He sent a formal acceptance, named rifles as weapons, appointed the rendezvous within thirty rods of the office, and then began to scratch out copy. When the hour arrived he was making up the forms, having got a little behind the programme, and by and by his second came in at the back door and said:

"We've been waiting for you all of twenty minutes."

"But I'm busy."

"This is no time to be busy; Perkins is all ready."

"Hang the luck!" growled the editor, as he filled out the column and flung down his rule. "That's just like Perkins—he wants to throw our publication day. Come on; I'll fill him up."

The editor seized his gun, and hatless and coatless, he set out on a lope for the spot. Perkins saw him coming in that fashion, and his knees weakened and his chin dropped, and, though the editor yelled for him to hold on a minute, he bolted over the fence and did not come out of the woods until he was six miles away.—Detroit Free Press.

"My lad, you are an honest boy."

"Yes, sir."

"And you look like a good boy."

"Yes, sir."

"And good boys should always be encouraged. In a box in the back room there are eight dozen eggs; you can take them home to your mother, and keep the basket."

The grocer had been saving up those eggs for days and weeks to reward some one. In rewarding a good boy he also got eight dozen bad eggs carried out of the neighborhood free of cost, and he chuckled as he walked homeward. The afternoon waned, night came and went, and once more the grocer went to his dinner. When he returned, his face wore a contented and complacent smile. His eye caught a basket of eight dozen eggs as he entered the store, and he queried:

"Been buying some eggs?"

"Yes, got hold of those from a farmer's boy," replied the clerk.

"A lame boy with a blue cap?"

"Yes."

"Two front teeth out?"

"Yes."

The grocer sat down and examined the eggs. The shells had been washed clean, but they were the same eggs which the good boy had taken home the day before.

PRINCIPLES.

The National Democrat of Rahway thus prefaced the introduction into its columns of our recent editorial on Jeffersonian principles:

"The following article from the Plainfield CONSTITUTIONALIST suits us exactly, and the sooner the leaders as well as the mass of the Democratic party place themselves squarely and immovably upon that platform of original Democratic principles, the sooner will the party control the government of the nation."

There is no doubt about political duty in that respect. If the party of Democracy is to achieve national success and regain former renown, it must come forth with boldness and unanimity in support of the very principles which gave it existence, and, as in the days of Jefferson, Madison and Jackson, battle for honesty, honor and justice, to the exclusion of every mercenary and personal consideration.

When the Democratic party occupied and bravely defended that position the people flocked to its standard.

The people would gladly do so again, because the fact is history that the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy, faithfully carried out, constitute the safeguard of civil freedom.

The Democratic party has made mistakes.

Those we would for the future avoid.

The Democratic party originated and advanced the prosperity of our country.

That we would perpetuate.

OFFICIAL THIEVES.

Philadelphia has been for years financially devastated by a ring of office-holding thieves, similar in character to the Tweed scoundrels who once pillaged and disgraced New York. The chief difference between the two gangs being this—the New York robbers were Democrats and some of them received merited punishment, while those of Philadelphia are Republicans and either escape trial or find pardon.

It has been well asserted that the most contemptible grade of crime is the robbing of a Church.

Philadelphia officials go lower than that, they get rich plundering Alms Houses.

Shades of Penn and Franklin!

Men entrusted with the administration of large public charities basely converting to their own personal gain thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of supplies furnished for the support of the indigent and infirm, and not stopping there, even stripping copper roofing from buildings and pocketing the proceeds of its sale.

If it be legal and just to lock up in jail a poor fellow who pilfers a little to appease hunger, what degree of imprisonment ought to be given Alms House robbers?

Natural life would not be too long.

Every good citizen must yearn for the time when rigid honesty in public positions will be held a religious duty.

To reach that, moral purity in the individual must be sought after and made an essential qualification for office.

It is priceless and the only reliable security against fraud and corruption.

The Republican fiasco at New Brunswick guarantees Mr. Ross an overwhelming majority.

It was a choice body that convened the other day for the ostensible purpose of naming a Republican candidate to run for Congress, if report speaks true, that several delegates declared they "intended to vote for Miles Ross, anyhow." That will do. Let us adjourn and ponder.

The Republican Congressional Convention at New Brunswick evidently believed that Miles Ross would be his own successor in spite of any and all opposition. Otherwise, they would certainly have put up a practical man to be voted for, instead of an inexperienced youth to be knocked down.

The excited delegate, who, about the close of the Freehold circus, stood beside the chairman and, with his plug hat and umbrella gesticulated a speech, probably had some grand regenerative policy in view, but the failure of the Convention to accord him a hearing has lost to the district much political lore.—Elizabeth Herald.

The Republicans of the First Congressional District of this State renominated Mr. Robeson at Camden, on Friday, by acclamation. C. H. Sinnickson, of Salem, presided, and Mr. Robeson was placed in nomination by Samuel H. Gray of Camden. Mr. Robeson, being invited to address the Convention, spoke at considerable length upon the issues of the campaign.

The latest insinuation we have heard against Hon. Miles Ross is that he engineered the Republican Convention in the matter of selecting a candidate for Congress. If Mr. Ross can manipulate at his own sovereign pleasure both Democratic and Republican conventions, he is beyond question the greatest political strategist of the age. As a military commander he would eclipse the glory of Wolseley in Egypt. His opponent for the Democratic nomination, our friend Martine, having been dubbed "Colonel," we see no good reason why our mutual friend Ross should not wear the higher title of Major General. Hoist from the ramparts a banner thus inscribed—

For Congress,
GENERAL MILES ROSS.

NEWTON CONVENTION.

A resolution was adopted at the Newton Convention, after the nomination of Mr. Harris, directing the Committee on resolutions to prepare a report and submit it to the Chairman for approval. Below will be found the resolutions drafted by the Committee and transmitted by Chairman Clark for publication. They, together with Mr. Harris' letter of acceptance, leaves no ground for any further opposition on the part of any Democrat to his election.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Sept. 4, 1882.

HON. HENRY S. HARRIS.

SIR: Herewith I beg leave to enclose you the resolutions presented me as Chairman of the Convention, in accordance with the action of that body, by resolution passed previous to its hurried dissembling—the Committee not having reported them, but being authorized to do so to me as the Chairman, and I to submit the same to you.

Respectfully,
ALVAH A. CLARK.

RESOLVED, That the Democratic party of this District, in Convention assembled, declare the following principles:

1st. Rigid economy in the administration of the general government.

2d. Reform in the civil service; prudency to be preferred to political service.

3d. Opposition to the Internal Revenue system and all measures of an inquisitorial nature, whereby a vast army of office-holders now maintained by the general government by taxation of the people will be avoided.

4th. Opposition to all forms of legislation whereby money is taken from the Federal Treasury under the guise of constitutional provisions, for purposes not essential to the defence and general welfare of the people.

5th. That we favor a tariff that will produce the necessary revenue and at the same time protect American industry.

6th. That we are opposed to the expenditure of public money in the improvement of rivers and harbors not national in character, and believing the River and Harbor bill recently passed by Congress to be to some extent of that nature, we express our disapproval of it in that respect.

7th. That while the views of our Representative as shown by his vote on the River and Harbor bill are at variance with ours as to some of its features, we are nevertheless satisfied that no improper motive influenced his action, and we therefore express our unlimited confidence in his honesty and probity, and our belief in his assent to our views in this respect in the future.

8th. That we pledge to our nominee our united and hearty support.

MARTIN C. SWARENSWELLER,

Some dissatisfied Democrats of Plainfield, egged on by wily Republicans, are talking about forming anti-Ross clubs and voting for a Republican Congressman. PRESS OPINIONS ON MILES ROSS' NOMINATION.

From the Rahway National Democrat, (Dem.)

For the fifth consecutive time we place at the head of our paper, this week, the name of Miles Ross, as the Democratic candidate for Congress in this district. Four times he has gallantly led the Democracy of the district to victory, and, we doubt not, will do so again. We have for some time honestly and conscientiously counseled a unity of action in this county, looking to the nomination of a candidate from our own number, but, from the diversity of opinion which has always prevailed, we found it an uphill and fruitless undertaking, and the Democracy of Union county will now, doubtless, again show that fealty to party principles which has characterized it in the past and will gallantly rally to the support of Mr. Ross. He needs no introduction or eulogy by us. His long and faithful service in Congress has made him well known to every voter. Some may disagree with him as to political methods, but he has always been found standing by the measures of the party, when some others have wavered. Much has been said of his action in sustaining the River and Harbor Appropriation Bill, but he had promised his constituents of this district to procure certain appropriations for them, and he redeemed that promise. Let all good Democrats now go to work and elect him by a larger majority than heretofore. If any of us have had personal objections, let us now bury them, as he has fairly received a renomination by the united vote of Middlesex and Monmouth, and nearly half of Union. The interests of the Democratic party and the bearing of his election upon the complexion of the next House of Representatives is of more importance than the gratification of any personal feelings.

From the Elizabeth Herald, (Dem.)

To-day we nail at our masthead the name of Miles Ross for Congress. We were opposed to his renomination for several reasons which were, to our mind, good and substantial ones. First, we believed the nomination belonged, of right, to Union county; second, we were opposed to the River and Harbor bill, which Mr. Ross upheld, sustained and voted for; and third, we believe in the two-terms system. Before the meeting at Freehold we urged, as we had a perfect right to do, our objections to Mr. Ross, and endeavored, by every honorable means in our power, to induce the Convention to nominate our distinguished fellow-citizen, W. A. Coursen, Esq., who, as we thought, filled the bill. But we have signally failed in our endeavor, because the assembled wisdom of the Democratic party, delegated to make the choice, has thought otherwise. There is no appeal from that decision in political discipline, and we, of course, bow to the wish of the majority, who decree that Mr. Ross shall have a fifth term. If our people are satisfied with Mr. Ross and his course on the internal improvements question, we cannot, without sacrificing our Democracy, do otherwise than cheerfully acquiesce in their decision, and do what we can to promote his success, notwithstanding all our efforts against him before he received the endorsement of the Democratic party in convention assembled. Such a course on the part of a party press is a necessity while politics exist, and it is the only course that will unite and keep a party intact. Before a nomination we may quarrel among ourselves as to personal preferences, but when we enter the door of a convention and submit to the will of those assembled we are, as honorable men and Democrats, bound to respect the choice that convention makes. Such has been our course, and although we may be disappointed and chagrined at our unsuccess, those feelings will not swerve us from our duty as Democrats. We are for Miles Ross because he is the chosen representative of the party whose banner we bear aloft, and shall work for him just as if we had not opposed his nomination. If any believe that his vote on the River and Harbor bill was a blunder, how will they benefit themselves by voting for a Republican? Robeson has been indorsed by his party in South Jersey, and, without his personal efforts, the obnoxious measure could not have been enacted. The Republican party stultifies itself by having one platform in Southern and two totally different ones in Central and Northern New Jersey. Such is the ridiculous attitude at this writing. The Camden Courier believes the River and Harbor bill to be a necessary, beneficial measure, while the Elizabeth Journal and other Stalwart organs in this district call it an outrage, a crime and a steal. We ask no Democrat to change his honest convictions because Mr. Ross has been renominated, but how can he benefit himself or his party by voting the Republican ticket? That party is the father of the bill, and no hope can be entertained that it will condemn its own offspring. Let us all, then, draw ourselves together as Democrats should and elect Mr. Ross. Should we, by divided councils and internal feuds, let a Republican slip into Congress on the false issue that party is essaying to raise in this district, they would undoubtedly laugh at us as a band of fools. That Democrat who desires to show, through the ballot-box, that he condemns the River and Harbor bill, will make a grave mistake by voting for a Republican candidate for Congress. As to Union county's undoubted rights, which have not been respected, that is a matter affecting only Democrats, and can be settled without Republican interference in the future councils of our own party. Let us, then, fellow Democrats, put out of sight our personal and county animosities, vote for the principles of the Democratic faith, and hurl from power a party whose misgovernment and crimes are changing us from a democracy to a plutocracy.

From [illegible] (Dem.)

The gentleman who was chosen at Tuesday to lead the Democratic forces of the Third Congressional district is so well known to our citizens that he needs no introduction from us, and his works during the four terms he has already been honored by his constituents with a seat in Congress commended him to the voters of the counties of Middlesex, Monmouth and Union as an efficient legislator, and one worthy of further confidence. His opponents have shown a remarkable captious spirit, and seemed to have based their opposition more upon the fact that he was Miles Ross than upon anything they could find to condemn in his conduct or record. The opposition, we believe, will speedily fade away now the nomination has been made so unanimously. The fact is, there was an organized opposition to Miles Ross's renomination, Union County having five candidates named from among about thirty of her delegation, while the remainder were Ross men. Probably only one of the five men would have been willing to encounter the canvass in the district. It was, therefore, the wisest thing for the Convention to do to place in renomination a man who had faithfully served his constituents through the previous terms, and of whose election there could be no doubt.

Mr. Doebler's defence of Mr. Ross's course on the River and Harbor bill was full, manly, open. He showed that works of the kind that had been so condemned, even to the much abused Cheesequakes, were not only right and proper, and in the interest of navigation, but were also in the interest of the public defence in case of war, as it was in just such places that the American navy would find its resources should our country ever be involved with foreign powers. What his predecessor in Congress promised to do and failed to accomplish, Mr. Ross has performed, and for the voters of Middlesex and Monmouth we can say that they appreciate his services in such a way as to give him their hearty support once more. To the Union County Democracy we offer the advice that they also give their undivided support to the nominee, and as this will doubtless be the last Congressional race Mr. Ross will make, let the three counties join hands and give him the largest majority he has yet received.

From the Monmouth Democrat, (Dem.)

We predicted two or three weeks ago that Hon. Miles Ross would be renominated for Congress without opposition. By the report of the proceedings furnished by our reporter and printed in another column, it will be seen that this prediction was almost literally fulfilled. The little opposition that was manifested came from Union county, and cannot be fairly considered as an opposition to Mr. Ross, nor even as a serious effort to obtain the nomination of that county. To an outsider it appeared to be nothing more than a little by-play of self-assertion to assure the District that Union county was on hand and that her dignity and importance must be recognized. Having secured this little point, when that county was called in convention a considerable portion of the delegation cast their ballots for Mr. Ross, and these with the solid votes of Middlesex and Monmouth made the vote so nearly unanimous that it was scarcely worth while to split hairs about it.

Having nominated the candidate the convention then proceeded to consider and adopt a platform of principles in which they declared in favor of legislation to encourage and promote commerce and manufactures; opposition and Jayhubbellism; against the monopoly of the public lands by great corporations; in favor of European immigration; and endorsing the course of Mr. Ross in Congress, and pledging him a hearty support. This last resolution was a matter of course, while the others, properly construed, may be fairly considered as sound Democratic doctrines, which Mr. Ross may be relied upon to support, in Congress and out of it.

In regard to Mr. Ross's election we consider that a foregone conclusion. Notwithstanding the rumors that certain prominent and sagacious Republicans have signified their willingness to accept a nomination, we adhere to our conviction heretofore expressed, that the opposition at the polls will be merely to save appearances. We are assured that throughout the District, especially along the sea-coast, for the improvement of which Mr. Ross has distinguished himself in obtaining large appropriations, and among the large manufacturing interests of Middlesex and Union, for which he has obtained valuable legislation, Republicans are as earnest in his support as Democrats. There are some who hoped the convention would fail to agree upon Mr. Ross, and were ready to be pressed into the service in his place—of course they and their friends were disappointed, and there are others who are jealous of his influence in the District, and would be glad to break it down; but these are few in numbers and their indifference in the contest will not be a noticeable quantity. We confidently predict the election of Mr. Ross by a fair majority.

From the Red Bank Standard, (Ind.)

The result of the Third Congressional District Democratic Convention was foreshadowed by many, and many were of the belief that it was an utter impossibility to defeat the Hon. Miles Ross, which was proven to be the case on Tuesday at Freehold, notwithstanding the efforts of his enemies to brand him, as a thief because he voted for the River and Harbor Appropriation. With the exception of the Union delegation the convention was unanimous in the renomination of Mr. Ross. This was no more than was looked for from the Union Delegation, as it is characteristic to them to create a row if it is possible to do so. A portion of them avowed their intention of withholding their support from Mr. Ross on election day, and aiding the republican party in electing a candidate to be chosen by them. These are common utterances from soreheads, but the breach is generally healed before the time for voting arrives. It was hinted that the absence of money is what caused such a dissension in the Union delegation, and it would not be at all surprising, judging from the character of a majority of the delegation. Certainly if they wished to defeat the nomination of Mr. Ross they should present a more gentlemanly delegation, but it matters not. Mr. Ross will be elected undoubtedly, with the River and Harbor bill in full force. It is useless for the people to condemn Mr. Ross for thus securing a portion of the appropriation for his district. If the people consider it a grab it is a good thing for the Third District to have a person there who can grab for them. Mr. Ross's vote would not have defeated the bill and if he had failed to have secure a portion of it there would have been a cry raised among his constituents of his worthlessness, and the election of a man urged who would look after the interests of this section more sharply. How Mr. Ross is to be benefited by this appropriation we cannot see. The moneys are all disposed of by officers of the Government and not one penny of it passes through Mr. Ross's hands. This talk of defeating him at the polls is more easily said than done, for Monmouth county will roll up a large majority for him.

From the Newark Journal, (Dem.)

As we expected and conceded before the convention met, the Democrats of the Third District have nominated Hon. Miles Ross as their candidate for Congress.

The compliment paid Mr. Ross is a deserved one. We cannot and will not stultify ourselves by approving his vote on the River and Harbor bill, but we can and will support him on the ground that, leaving out this one act, which we regard as undemocratic, his record is creditable and his personal integrity stands unimpeached. We repeat what we have repeatedly said before, that even this district, to say nothing of his own, the Third, is indebted to him for whatever advantages have been derived from proper Federal appropriations for the improvement of the Passaic River and Newark Bay. The people of this district would be ingrates if they did not remember Mr. Ross's services to them, and therefore his renomination receives their general approval.

Isaac Wildrick of Blairstown received the Democratic nomination for Assembly in the First District of Warren county, Monday. He is over 70 years old, and he represented his district in Congress 30 years ago.

The Third District Republican Congressional Convention met in the Masonic Hall at New Brunswick, on Friday of last week, and nominated John Kean, Jr.

John Ryle, of Paterson, was nominated for Congress by the Democrats in the Fifth District on Wednesday last.

The Republican State Convention of New York on Wednesday last nominated Charles J. Folger for Governor.

The Massachusetts Republicans have nominated Robert R. Bishop for Governor.

The Democrats of the Second (N. J.) District nominated Lewis Parker of Trenton, for Congress.

The Massachusetts Democrats nominated Ben. Butler for Governor.

The war between Egypt and England is ended. By a masterly move, Gen. Wolseley on Thursday last captured Cairo and caused the Egyptian troops to surrender. Arabi Pasha and Toulba Pasha were made prisoners. General Wolseley telegraphed home—"The war is over. Send no more men from England."

CITY DEPARTMENT.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - - City Editor.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER IN UNION COUNTY.

Oh for an Opera House.

Full moon next Wednesday.

Cheese it, Cully, Dodd's home!

Autumn begins at 10:30 o'clock this evening.

Let us hope for good, Fair weather next week.

In this issue, Miss O. L. Rogers announces the re-opening of her classes in piano and organ music.

The contributions in behalf of the W. C. T. U. for the Fair will be sent to the Holly Tree Inn instead of Fourth street as before announced.

On Thursday, Oct. 19th, Mr. Isaac Brokaw will sell at public auction the very desirable property on Somerset street known as the Hillman estate.

Misses M. A. Humphrey and Bissell have returned from their Summer trip, and at No. 64 West Second street are ready to fulfill all orders for fashionable dressmaking.

The contract for building the North Plainfield Catholic church was given our old friend County Collector P. Sheridan, who has awarded the contract for mason work to Wm. C. Smith of North Plainfield.

The Hebrew New Year festival was celebrated on Thursday of last week and universally observed by Plainfield merchants of that sect in the closing of their places of business. It is now the year 5643.

John Morris, the well-known horse dealer, advertises in this issue an auction sale of fine horses on the 28th of this month. Purchasers may depend upon square dealing in bargaining with Mr. Morris.

Straw hats are called in, and their former wearers are calling in at Laing's every day and fitting their heads with a Fall derby from the large stock of the latest styles that is offered at No. 6 Park avenue.

The handsome post that has been placed on Park avenue at the entrance of the Chautauqua Building, surmounted by a gas-lamp, and containing a reliable thermometer, is the work of that able carpenter, Mr. John Chandler.

On Tuesday last, the surviving members of the 14th Regt. N. J. Vols., held a Re-union at Jamesburg, on the grounds of Adjutant Buckalew. Some five or six old soldiers of the Regiment residing in this city, were present on the occasion.

In this issue is advertised the delinquents of North Plainfield and the description of the property to be sold to pay the taxes. Collector VanNorstrand, however, gives timely notice, and an opportunity to settle is thus afforded the advertised.

The Somerset County Court on Tuesday, granted a license to Mr. John Hughes, proprietor of the Somerset House, North Plainfield. Not a single remonstrance against the petition was presented. License was also granted Mr. Geo. Hartfelder.

Our marketmen were greatly inconvenienced last Saturday morning by a smash-up on the C. R. R., that blocked the track for some time and delayed the arrival of various kind of produce that was needed to supply the wants of Plainfield housekeepers.

The place to order a suit for the coming season is at Titsworth's, No. 41 West Front street, where thousands of samples may be seen and selected from. Also any cleaning, altering or repairing desired, will be done in a most thorough and satisfactory manner.

We hereby notify our subscribers that are thinking about purchasing Fall goods, to look out for the bargains that Loderer, of No. 9 West Front street, will proclaim in our next issue. Dress goods, underwear, notions and a large line of carpets, &c., will be offered at a slight advance on cost.

The Plainfield Academy moved into its new building yesterday, and its roll shows a larger proportion of attendance than ever before. Those interested and wishing to witness the teaching of the German language by the conversational method, will be welcome any day at 10 o'clock, a. m.

[illegible]'s popular Dry and Fancy Goods establishment is receiving renewed favors from the many friends drawn thither by their continued offers of rich and attractive goods at the most tempting prices. Their latest announcement appears in our columns this week. Read it for your own benefit.

We would call the attention of Plainfield's merchants to the advantage of their having plenty of business cards for distribution on the Fair grounds during the Union-Middlesex Counties' Exhibition of next week. We are able to fill orders for such with promptness, and in the best style of workmanship.

A correspondent of "East Third street" should send her name if she desires her communication published. We will say, however, that "more street lamps" in the vicinity would not remedy the evil she complains of. Plainfield's penalties meted out to corner loafers, have no terrors for that class of nuisance.

Undoubtedly the handsomest front of any place of business in this city, is that of James H. Force on Front street opposite the old post office. The entire woodwork has been artistically grained in panels and mouldings of rich mahogany, and presents a most attractive appearance due to the good taste and ability of Messrs. Weaver Bros., the painters.

Warren Engine No. 3 was taken to the new fire well, corner of Ninth street and Central avenue, last Tuesday evening for a "wash." Everything worked satisfactorily and the well was found to give a bountiful supply of water. The suction caused the wall to sink about eighteen inches, which was a benefit to it. All new fire wells settle thus when first tried.

To keep pace with the demands of an increasing business, Collier, the Plainfield jeweler, has had made for his special needs one of the handsomest and most convenient safes we have ever seen. It is from the manufactory of the Cincinnati Safe and Lock Co.; and besides its improved fittings for security, is beautifully ornamented and painted by artists of talent and taste.

In our advertising columns to-day is the usual announcement of Messrs. Geo. Watson & Co., the toney clothiers of Newark. The garments of that firm are noted for their stylish fit, elegant cut, handsome trimming and perfect appearance of the finest custom work. We would recommend the reader to call and examine Watson & Co's stock before purchasing an Autumn outfit.

In calling attention to the advertisement of Messrs J. W. & H. Coddington published elsewhere, we would personally bear testimony as to the remarkable purity of the ice that firm is furnishing families, hotels, butchers and others. The ice is cut from ponds of clear spring water and is of the very finest quality. So free is it from snow or film, that a newspaper can be read through quite a thickness.

All of the engines of the Amboy Division have been supplied with a box about ten inches square, containing bandages, lint etc., to be used in case of an accident. It also contains a card on which is printed directions for distinguishing venous from arterial blood in the case of incised wounds, together with instructions how to apply the tourniquet in the event of an artery being severed. This case is kept in the engineer's box, under the seat, so as to be within easy reach in case of need.

A Mrs. Young of Philadelphia, while at Atlantic City was so annoyed by the mosquitoes that she went to a drug store to get something to keep them off. The clerk gave her a quantity of oxalic acid in its purest state. That evening the lady, being terribly annoyed by mosquitoes, rubbed it on her limbs and was terribly burned, her legs from the knees down being eaten almost to the bone and totally paralyzed. She is now in the hands of Dr. Drysdale, of Philadelphia, who has slight hopes of saving her life.

The contract for extending the water bed under the Somerset Street County line bridge, has been awarded to Mr. Isaac [illegible]. The necessary work is awarded by resolution of the Boards of Freeholders of Union and Somerset Counties. We suggest that the Committee on Wells, of the Fire Board, make arrangements to have an excavation made at the lower end of the bridge so that a pool may be formed from which the steamers can take water in case of necessity. A water supply at this point is a much needed want should a fire occur in the vicinity.

Poor [illegible], of the Flemington Democrat, has our kind permission to say whatever he pleases about us. We can appreciate the state of his disposition at being identified (against his wish) with a supposed Democratic journal that is expending most of its power fighting the regular candidate of his (?) party. Personals.

Mr. [illegible] Stephens, an able journalist formerly engaged on the San Francisco Chronicle, recently spent some time in this city as the guest of Mr. Wm. VanVoorhis. Mr. Stephens has now established himself in New York and has joined the Press Club. The dailies of that city which he is serving in a reportorial capacity, are therefore the gainers by the transfer of his talents and experience from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. John G. [illegible], the Front street druggist, left this city on Tuesday for a short vacation amid various scenes, intending, before returning, to visit the Adirondack wilds. We are reliably informed in this connection that the journey will not be taken alone—being what is universally termed a wedding trip—and that Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] will reside during the Winter in Plainfield.

Councilman Robert Livingston and family have returned to their home in this city, after their summer sojourn abroad. Mr. L. recounts with pride his numerous conquests among the finny tribe in the Adirondacks. His bronzed complexion evidences that he was benefited in health by his excursion. It will be his fortune to make a business trip to SanFrancisco in a few weeks.

Mr. Samuel Pound and wife, former residents of Plainfield, visited our office a few days since, while on a short visit among friends here. They expressed surprise at the many changes and improvements made in and about Plainfield since Mr. Pound was engaged in the bakery business here a number of years ago.

Mr. A. O. Baldwin of Park avenue, has become the owner by purchase of the handsomely framed and artistically painted lily that was recently on exhibition in the window of [illegible] pharmacy. Another specimen by the same talented artist, Mr. David Runyon, is now displayed at the same place.

David C. Smalley, Jr., is not its name, as it is yet too young to be baptised, but nevertheless it is a fine handsome boy of which the parents are justly proud. We congratulate Dave upon the possession of an heir, but at the same trust it will grow up a better Democrat than its father.

Mr. Karl T. Polak and family have again taken possession of their comfortable residence at Netherwood, after enjoying unbounded pleasures among friends during the summer season. Karl was welcomed home by a host of friends.

Mr. M. T. Mulford from the manufactory of "Sweet, Orr & Co.," Wappingers Falls, N. Y., is, with his family, spending a two weeks vacation among relatives in this city.

Mr. Ferdinand [illegible] of Broadway has just returned from his European tour looking unusually well and feeling remarkably vigorous.

Abe Freeman has entered the employment of Messrs Carney Bros who thus secure an industrious, willing and capable workman.

Dr. Chas. A. Hart has returned from his short vacation to Connecticut, looking and feeling better from the pleasures enjoyed.

The Somerville Fair.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Oct. 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th, the Somerset County Agricultural Society will hold its Thirteenth Annual Exhibition on its grounds at Somerville, N. J. The occasion is to be a most successful one, as unusual efforts for its good have been exerted and new features and attractions secured. The track has received much attention and been greatly improved, now measuring one-half mile, three feet from pole, so that good races in every particular are assured.

Blown up.

Early yesterday morning, Locomotive No. 413 of the P. & R. Co. at the head of a train of coal cars, stood on the siding near Dunellen waiting to follow the Philadelphia train that leaves this city for New York at 3:32, a. m. On the locomotive were Engineer H. C. Betts, Fireman C. Cotter and Brakemen A. G. Weisner and M. J. Reynolds. While these sat eating their breakfast, without a sign of warning the boiler of the engine exploded with terrible effect. The fireman and brakemen were quite seriously bruised and scalded, and of the locomotive nothing was left in place but the running gear. The victims were attended in the Dunellen station by Dr. Fritts, of this city, and subsequently sent to their homes in Philadelphia.

Fall Gatherings of Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey.

A series of District Conventions or Conferences will be held preceding the State Convention, at which the reports of the year's work will be presented, as formerly, to the State Convention; also plans of work, suggestions, questions answered, etc.

Each Association is requested to be largely represented at the District Conferences. Sessions will be held in the afternoon and evening only, and opportunities will be given for social intercourse, which will be a prominent feature of each gathering.

The Associations of the 1st District—Sussex, Warren, Morris and Passaic counties—will meet at Morristown, Y. M. C. A. Hall, Sept. 22d; Associations of the 2d District—Bergen, Essex, Hudson and Union counties—at Plainfield, Oct. 5th; Associations of the 3d District—Somerset, Middlesex, Monmouth and Ocean counties—at New Brunswick, Oct. 18th; Associations of the 4th and 5th Districts—Hunterdon, Mercer, Burlington, Camden, Gloucester, Salem, Atlantic, Cumberland, and Cape May counties—at Camden, November 1st.

A Conference of College Associations will be held at Princeton in November.

The State Convention will be held at Newark, December 6th to 8th.

Pastors of churches in each District are invited to attend these gatherings, and, if no Associations exist in their neighborhoods, to bring representatives of their young men.

As a Ladies' Auxiliary is considered part of Y. M. C. A. work, ladies are invited to participation in the Conference.

Will pastors of churches and the press aid us in giving notice of these meetings?

Base Ball.

On the grounds of the Westfield Base Ball Club last Saturday afternoon, its team was badly beaten in five innings by a nine of the Crescent Association of this city. The game in the beginning was admirably played, with but few errors, and gave every appearance of the result being the usual defeat of the Plainfielders. When the Westfield nine finished its fourth innings with a score of five to its opponent's nothing, the many friends of the Crescents present lost all hope. But as we have repeatedly remarked, our home team never loses its courage and invariably plays better in the face of apparent defeat. The Crescents gained five runs in their fourth inning, tying the score, and added four more in the fifth—whereas the Westfields, although allowed an extra chance at the bat before the game was called on account of the darkness, could only gain an additional run.

The laurels of the day were carried off by Douglas and Pinckney—the two playing most beautifully together and in their respective positions. Casey caught Walter's pitching with much credit, and seemed to be a more reliable man for the position than McQuade who was absent on account of sickness. Lowry captured two long flys and McGee a short one that looked very much like a teaser. Walters pitched with his usual deceptiveness, and only two reached their first on called balls throughout the game. Cornwall had little to do in the field, and was so unfortunate as to be left on base with Walters in both the third and fourth innings. Garett filled his position without one error, and Murray, Yerkes and Doane held themselves in readiness for the chances that never came to display their abilities.

Walters and Yerkes, as usual, lead the batting score for the Crescents with two singles apiece, and Cornwall and Garett each secured one. Foster and Douglas of the Westfields were credited with two base-hits apiece, and Pinckney and Davis each a single. The following is the score in detail.

In New Hands.

Judge E. W. [illegible] and family having removed to New York city, the management of the popular Washington Rock House has passed into the hands of Mr. Wallace Vail. The latter will conduct the same with that necessary thoughtfulness and care for the comforts and desires of the guests, which will insure success and profit.

Minstrels.

The J. H. [illegible] Combination of talented minstrels has engaged [illegible] Hall for two of their enjoyable entertainments during the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 4th & 5th. The company consists of professional performers from New York city besides amateurs of Plainfield, who will unite in rendering a programme of general excellence. The orchestra will be selected musicians of New York. We would advise the attendance of all who can enjoy a first-class entertainment, and who desire at the same time to assist a most worthy cause. The profits of the two performances will be donated to the building fund of the North Plainfield Catholic Church.

The New Catholic Church.

On Sunday afternoon next at 3 o'clock, will be laid the corner stone of the North Plainfield Catholic Church, amid the most impressive ceremonies and in the presence of an illustrious gathering.—Bishop O'Farrell, of the Trenton Diocese, one of the most fluent speakers of the State, will take part as well as other distinguished orators. A special train will leave Bergen Point at one o'clock, stopping at Elizabeth and the Fort, upon the arrival of which at Plainfield a grand procession will form and proceed to the ground under the command of Mr. Jas. Connelly, Grand Marshal of the day.—The Ancient Order of Hibernians, St. Patrick's Alliance, T. A. B's., Hibernian Rifles and societies of this and other cities, will take part in the parade.

Firemen's Relief Association.

All the members present excepting Messrs Hubbard, Voorhees and Mallinson. Mr. W. B. Cook was made temporary chairman. A communication from the Secretary of the State Association, calling for the appointment of three delegates to attend the Annual Convention at Elizabeth, Sept. 27th, was received and chairman Hubbard and Messrs Mallinson and [illegible] were appointed delegates to attend same. Application for relief was presented by the Chairman of the Relief Committee for a member of Warren Engine Co. No. 3, who is suffering from a severe attack of typhoid fever. Relief was granted by payment of medical attendance during sickness. No further business appearing the meeting adjourned to meet at Warren Engine House, Oct 12th.

Also a communication from Collector [illegible] stating his submission therewith of the tax duplicate as received from the Assessor.

The Council on motion then took a recess of ten minutes, for examination of the Assessor's books.

On re-assembling, Mr. Ginna moved the adoption of a resolution that the duplicate for the year 1882 as presented to the Council be confirmed. Carried.

Mr. Ginna from Special Com., on the proposition of L. E. Clark, reported as follows:

Report of the Special Committee upon Proposition of L. E. Clark, ex-Collector.

The special committee appointed to investigate the accounts of the late city collector and late township accounts, and to whom was referred the proposition of L. E. Clark to settle the city's claim against him, beg to report:

That they have carefully weighed this proposition and submitted it to the corporation attorney and the retained counsel, Hon. Thos. N. McCarter.

These gentlemen point out the legal obstacles to its acceptance and unhesitatingly advise against the city entertaining it in this form.

First, Mr. Clark demands that the accounts shall all be re-examined by experts, which might consume three months and certainly could not be done under sixty days, consuming a period of time and at an expense which your committee do not think is justifiable; particularly when it is understood that the amount of taxes collected for the years covered by his term of office and charged against Mr. Clark by the accountant substantially agree with his own acknowledgment of receipts, (aside from amounts collected for years previous to 1874 the difference is only $32,) while for collections previous to 1874 and for interest collected during his term of office your committee accept his own figures. With this explanation the absurdity of a re-examination will be apparent to all.

Second, Mr. Clark insisted upon any arbitration and re-examination being conducted with a view to base any settlement upon the original amount found by the expert to be deficient, say $4,[illegible], and embodied in the first report of committee.

This your committee positively refused to entertain for the reason that since this account was rendered, the expert, under the direction of the committee, has continued his examinations with the result of adding some $2,000 more to the original deficiency and carrying it to-day to over $6,[illegible], with a prospect of being increased as investigations progress.

Now, turning to the disbursements, the entire deficiency shown to exist to-day is to be found in four items, three of which cover over $5,300, and which items could be substantiated or refuted in a few hours.

Third, a "sine qua non" with Mr. Clark to any settlement was a withdrawal of all criminal or civil suits that may have been commenced against him by the city and the voiding of his recognizance.

This is a matter entirely beyond the control of your committee or of any officer of the city and could not for one moment be entertained. But to test the sincerity of Mr. Clark's proposition for a settlement and to secure an amicable adjustment of the claim of the city if possible, your committee invited Mr. Clark, Mr. Coward and all of the parties offering themselves as sureties with the privilege of associating with them any parties calculated to aid in securing an understanding, to a conference at corporation attorney Marsh's office on Saturday Sept. 16th. Only Mr. Clark, Mr. Coward and Mr. Corlell were present. At this meeting the committee, while declining to entertain the conditions of settlement as set forth in the proposition of Mr. Clark, for reasons herein fully explained, proposed that, as there was no substantial difference between the receipts as shown by the accountant's statement and Mr. Clark's own acknowledgment, we should confine ourselves to the only matters in dispute, namely the four items in disbursements heretofore alluded to and more fully set forth in the statement herewith attached and which points your committee are satisfied could have been settled then and there, or, if not, by auditors to be selected, in a very few hours.

This proposition Mr. Clark positively refused to entertain and the conference adjourned without having accomplished the object for which it was called, and your committee came out of it fully convinced that the true object of this proposition of Mr. Clark's was not to settle the just claims of the city but simply to secure delay and if possible prevent action before the grand jury and the courts convening the second Tuesday in October.

For all the reasons set forth in this report your committee would advise against the acceptance of Mr. Clark's proposition and herewith beg to return it to the council and advise its return to Mr. Clark.

Your committee having carried this examination of the ex-collector's and the township books as far as contemplated in the original resolution would recommend that the whole matter, together with all the papers and documents bearing upon the case and now in their hands be transferred to his honor the mayor and corporation attorney, and to be by them, in conjunction with the retained counsel, Hon. Thomas N. McCarter, and your committee, prosecuted before the courts as the legal counsel shall direct.

Before closing, your committee would call attention to the fact that since their last report was made the city has come into full possession of a portion of the township books and these they have had the accountant re-examine, and from this examination are confident that there are such irregularities in the township accounts that demand a more searching examination, and this they would recommend be made at once, and that the late township committee be called upon to furnish all books, papers, &c. that can throw light upon this matter.

Respectfully submitted.

S. A. GINNA,
HENRY B. NEWHALL,
Of Special Committee.

Mr. H. Lindsley, remaining member of the committee out of the city.

Plainfield, N. J., Sept. 19th, 1882.

Communication received and the following offered by Mr. Ginna in connection, were carried. All ayes.

WHEREAS, The Special Committee appointed to investigate the accounts of the late Collector report this date a certain deficiency and recommend that all papers, accounts, statements, &c., be referred to his Honor, the Mayor, and the Corporation Attorney, to take such legal action upon as Counsel may direct. Be it

Resolved, That the Special Committee directed to examine the accounts of the late Collector, L. E. Clark, and the late township accounts be and it is hereby directed to transfer to his Honor, the Mayor, all the papers connected with the late investigation; and he is requested in conjunction with the Corporation Attorney, to take any and all lawful proceedings which they may find advisable whether under the civil or criminal law, to obtain for the city its just dues and to secure the indictment and conviction of any and all persons found embezzling public funds or conspiring against the rights and welfare of this city. The Mayor and Corporation Attorney to advise in these matters with the retained Counsel, and with the Special Committee of this Council.

WHEREAS, A re-examination of the township books lately transferred to the city reveals certain irregularities, Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Special Committee is hereby requested to proceed with an examination into the affairs of the township of Plainfield and ascertain what monies were received by it for taxes or otherwise, and the method of levying said taxes, what loans were negotiated by it or its Treasurer, and what disposition was made of same, carefully examine all vouchers taken for disbursements, and ascertain the authority for all such payments, and endeavor to secure all information of importance looking to an equitable adjustment of the city and township affairs, and for this examination the Com. is authorized to secure the services of a competent accountant.

On motion of Mr. Ginna, seconded by Mr. Livingston, the proposition of Mr. Clark was ordered returned as declined.

Mr. J. Simpson, from Aud. Com. reported as correct the claim of Berry & Thorn, $30 15. Warrant ordered drawn. Mr. Thompson voting in the negative.

Mr. Ginna from Laws Com., reported as correct the claim of L. F. Wadsworth, $10. Ref'd to Aud. Com.

Mr. Livingston from License Com., reported the approval of the following petitions: Goodman Bros and F. Cole for peddler's licenses and W. [illegible] as cartman. All granted.

Mr. Thompson moved for adoption a resolution authorizing the Street Com., to expend [illegible] for sprinkling Park avenue during the holding of the County Fair. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Ginna, a communication from Delinquent Collector Moore was taken from the table read by the Clerk, and placed on file.

Mr. Ginna offered a resolution fixing the compensation of Moore at [illegible] upon all taxes collected [illegible]. Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

A VAGRANT'S ROMANCE.

The contemplation of being knocked down at auction may not be pleasant for apostles of laziness and leisure, but it is about the only way that some vagrants can be made useful. The provisions of the vagrant act are often beneficial to those upon whom they are imposed. It has so proven in the past, and the auctioneer's block has proven the turning point in more than one man's life. As an illustration of this there is old Captain Joe Coombs. There is a good deal of romance in his history, but the facts are sufficiently vouched for to justify its repetition here.

Something like fifty or sixty years ago, Joe Coombs was an idler about town—a worthless, no-account fellow—whom no one respected and every one was ready to kick. A love of liquor was a companion to his passion for leisure, and combined made Joe a model vagrant.

Everything else failing he was finally convicted under the vagrant law and sentenced to be sold at the court house door. The date is obscure, but it must have been between 1833 and 1836, for in 1843 he was piloting the steamer Rainbow. At the time he was out of condition and not a desirable purchase, but he was finally knocked down to a river captain for thirty-seven and a half cts. The rubicon in Joe Coombs' life was passed when he left the auctioneer's block. He went with the man who had him from the State. Joe's master, or his friend, as it turned out, put him to work as a rouster on a steamboat. At that time the river was the only avenue of transportation to the South, and steamboating was lively and prosperous. Forced to work, Coombs soon threw off his old habits of laziness, and became an active, industrious man. He surprised all by his activity and perseverance, rose rapidly from one position to another, and at the end of his year of service was in charge of the boat upon which he had been driven to work as a vagrant, and was considered one of the best pilots on the river.

Fortune had given her wheel a lucky turn for him, and he did not waste the opportunity. In a few years of perseverance he accumulated wealth, and as owner and commander of the steamer Rainbow, running between this city and New Orleans, he became among the leading boatmen of his day.

Something like twenty years after he had been sold, Captain Coombs secured control of the Exchange Hotel, at the corner of Sixth and Main streets, where the Hamilton block now stands, and for several years conducted one of the leading and most popular public houses in the city.

It was during this time that he went to Philadelphia where he was married to a rich young widow. Returning to the South he again went on the river, and at the time the war broke out, was in command of the steamer Louisville, which boat was captured at Memphis by General Pillow, and two or three years later she was again captured by the Federal gunboats, and about the close of the war Captain Coombs went to Washington, and it is said succeeded in getting a claim through Congress for the value of his boat.

Those who knew him in the days of his prosperity speak of him as frank, noble and generous. He was never offended by an allusion to the past, and often spoke of the day upon which he was sold as his "lucky day." Many of the older people about the city remember Captain Coombs. As proprietor of the Exchange Hotel he was a jolly host and many anecdotes are told of him. During his experience as river captain and hotel keeper, he accumulated wealth and when he died left a considerable estate.

Strange were the experiences of Captain Coombs. From a vagrant he climbed up the social ladder to a position of wealth and respectability. Such contrasts are found in the history of but few lives. He was a man that, in the prime and vigor of his youth, was totally unable to make an opportunity for himself, but his experience proves that the possibilities of a life are limitless. At that time of life when power should be greatest, he was destitute of energy, and called a worthless fellow, but when the time came he took the tide at its flood which led on to fortune.—Louisville (Ky.) World.

Ficelle or twine bonnets can be worn with any kind of toilet, but they are not elegant.

None but home-made dresses, and very ugly ones at that, are inflated with crinoline.

The corsages of some very handsome costumes are laced up in front instead of buttoning.

"Ma, ma, Bill Jones is in the parlor with sister Jane, and he keeps biting her every little while."

"What! William biting Jane?"

"Yes'm, I seed him do it ever so many times. Bite her right on the mouth, and the tarnal girl didn't holler a bit."

"Ah, never mind, Ned; I guess he didn't hurt her much."

"Hurt her! Crackey! Why she likes it. I seed it all through the key hole. I'll fire taters at him the next time."

Recently a strapping negro woman was up before an Austin justice, charged with unmercifully beating her boy, a saddle-colored imp.

"I don't understand how you can have the heart to beat your own children so cruelly."

"Judge, has you been a parent of a wuthless yaller boy like dat ar dub of mine?"

"Never!" ejaculated the Judge with great vehemence.

"Den don't talk."

CHEESEQUAKES.

A great deal is said in the newspapers now-a-days about Cheesequakes Creek in this County, and the appropriations made by Congress for the improvement of its navigation. Much of this talk is due to the peculiar name of the harbor, and to ignorance on the part of the writers relative to its importance. Thirty, forty, fifty, and many more years ago, Cheesequakes was known as "The Harbor," and it was really the best harbor, outside of Amboy, on the whole Jersey coast, and daily lines of passenger and freight steamers ran into it. It was then the most important shipping-point for the farm produce of northern Monmouth and southeastern Middlesex. A bar formed across the mouth of the harbor, and shipping was then driven into Keyport harbor, a few miles to the south, and the trade that centered there built up the large and thriving towns of Keyport and what is now known as Matawan. If the sandbars had been removed forty years ago, no doubt a large town would have grown up on the banks of the much-abused Cheesequakes. The shipping business now transacted on Cheesequakes Creek is largely the shipping of potters-clay, which is of the finest variety, and sent to all parts of the United States. Now only vessels of about one hundred and fifty tons capacity can enter the harbor. If the improvements contemplated by Congress are made, vessels of fifteen hundred tons can then pass in and out of that harbor, the freight charges therefrom will be materially lessened, and the trade of that region largely increased thereby. We learn from the Central Railroad office, whose bridge crosses the mouth of the harbor, that during the year 1881 six hundred and seventeen vessels passed through the draw of the Long Branch bridge, carrying out an average of one hundred and fifty tons each of the products of that region, so it will be seen, that notwithstanding the obstructions to navigation, the trade of the "Creek" is of no mean importance. If all the appropriations made in the River and Harbor bill were as worthy as that made for the improvements at Cheesequakes, there would not be any excuse for the great outcry there is against said bill.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

MR. HARRIS' RECORD ON THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Hon. Henry S. Harris stands recorded as having voted for but three of the general appropriation bills which passed the last Congress. These three bills amounted in the aggregate to only $19,501,712, while the total appropriations made amounted to the enormous sum of $295,533,987. He stands recorded as having voted for the River and Harbor bill, $18,738,870, the Agricultural College bill, $427,280, and the Military Academy bill, $335,587.

Mr. Harris was the only Democrat from New Jersey who voted against the Army bill of $27,258,000.

The various appropriation bills are as follows:

Army	$ 27,258,000
Naval	15,351,000
Pensions	100,000,000
General Deficiency	20,800,000
Sundry Civil	25,763,000
Legislation, Exec. & Judicial	20,209,000
Fortifications	375,000
Urgent Deficiency	4,049,246
Consular and Diplomatic	1,258,655
Indians	5,229,274
Post Office	44,643,900
Agricultural	427,280
Military Academy	335,587
River and Harbor	18,738,875
Total	$295,533,987

Little Johnny Fiddletop was a page in the Legislature when it was in session in Austin, and his conversation has had a political flavor ever since. Yesterday, for instance, he asked his ma:

"Am I to get a second piece of pie after I get through with this?"

"Indeed you are not."

"Then, Mrs. Speaker, in that case, the sooner there is a change in the administration, the better for the material interests of the country."

Major Jim Sumpter, a wealthy citizen of Austin, is about to erect a family residence. He is a particular friend of Gilhooly, and applied to that gentleman for advice.

"What do you want to know?" asked Gilhooly.

"Well, you see, I want to build the house so the kitchen won't smoke, and I don't want to be bothered with mosquitoes in the bed-rooms. How am I to go at it?"

"That is the easiest thing in the world. If you want to prevent your kitchen from smoking, just cook in your bed-room, and the smoke in the bed-room will drive out the mosquitoes, so that you will kill two birds with one stone."

Scotch people and old-time folks all know what is the meaning of "upset sale." It is a term used when things are to be sold out to close estates, partnerships or corporations.

DOWN GO THE PRICES!
The people have treated me generously for many years and I am satisfied even though I do sacrifice my profits one month.
IN A NUTSHELL, THIS IS IT!
The practical point of all this is a radical reduction in prices from August first. They are cut, some ten, some twenty, some thirty per cent., and some on goods prepared specially for this sale, not at all! My great desire is to get the people to examine the goods and see the reality of the reductions.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A LAWYER'S STORY.

"Can I sit with you?"

"Certainly, sir."

"Nice weather."

"Splendid, indeed."

I was sitting in a passenger coach on a Wisconsin railroad one day years ago when a good-looking, pleasant-spoken man came along, stopping at my seat, and the above conversation took place; the latter part of it after I had given him a part of my seat.

Now I am regarded as a social man. I like a good joke; and I think a sour, morose man, who uses his tongue only when obliged to, is bound to die of some terrible disease and go to some place of bad bad punishment.

On entering a railroad car I always look about for a talkative man, and then get as close to him as possible, and drain him dry, if the journey is long enough.

And I want to state one thing more. Left an orphan before I could realize the event which made one, I got kicked here and cuffed there and "grew up between folks," as they say.

I ought to have had, at the time of which I write, a pretty thorough knowledge of human nature, and have been able to read in a man's face if he intended me evil.

I did not pride myself on being over keen or extra sharp, but the knocking around among strangers ought to give one a good experience.

Well, the stranger and I fell into an easy strain of conversation as we rode on together, and in ten minutes I began to enjoy his company. He was a well-made fellow, finely dressed, and he wore a fine watch and a simon pure diamond ring. I never saw a man who could talk so easily and so pleasantly. It seemed that he had but to open his mouth and the words fell right out.

I had traveled in the South, so had he. I had heard the loud roar of the Pacific; he knew all about it. I had been up in a balloon, down in a mine; been blown up, smashed up, and repaired again; my new friend had experienced all those things, and was waiting for something new to turn up of a more startling nature. We agreed on politics, and I had never met such a railroad companion.

Did you ever meet a man who, though a stranger to you ten minutes before, could wrest from you secrets which you'd sworn to yourself not to reveal? Well, he was such a man. It was not long before he commenced asking me questions in such a sly, roundabout way, that before I knew it I was giving him my history.

I was just at the time on the point of being admitted to the bar of Wisconsin as a student of Law & Law, of Belleville.

The firm were old lawyers, with lucrative practice, and it had been talked over that in about a month I was to become "Co." of the firm. A year before an old farmer named Preston, down about four miles from Grafton, had died, and his matters had been put into the hands of Law & Law for settlement.

Preston had died rich. He had money in the bank, railroad stocks, mortgages, etc., and everything was settled up to the satisfaction of the relict and the fatherless.

About a year before his death, being short of money and not wishing to sell anything at a sacrifice, Preston had given a mortgage on his farm for $3,000. While the papers read "one year from date," there was a verbal agreement that it should be lifted off any day when Preston desired.

A month after, when, having the money, he desired to clear off the paper, the old money-bags holding it refused to disgorge, wishing to secure his interest for a year.

I was on my way to ascertain the date of expiration. A fire among our office papers had destroyed the memoranda, and I must go down and get the date from old Scripts, who lived south of Grafton about five miles. The stranger had pumped all this out of me in ten minutes; and yet I never once suspected that he was receiving information.

"I am not positive," I added, "but I am pretty sure the time is the 13th—which would be next Tuesday."

"And then your folks will send down the money and discharge the mortgage?" he inquired.

"Oh, yes. I should most likely bring it down," I replied, and it never occurred to me how imprudent I was.

He turned the conversation into other channels and did not once attempt to pump me further. We got to Grafton at half-past ten, and to my surprise he announced that he was to stop in the town on business. I had not asked his name or vocation, while he knew everything about me.

We went to the hotel, had dinner, and then I secured a lively team and drove out, getting through with the business so that I was back to take the half-past two express east. My friend was on the porch of the hotel as I drove up, carrying the same honest dignified face.

"Well, did you find out?" he inquired, in his pleasant way.

"It's on the 13th, as I expected," I replied.

We had lunch together, and when we shook hands and parted I had no more idea of seeing him again than I have of [illegible]

Everything at the office went on as usual, and the 13th came at length. Law & Law had arranged for me to go down with the money, and I looked upon it as a [illegible] of my [illegible].

"We know you are all right," remarked the senior partner, as I was about to go; "but I want to give you a word of warning, nevertheless. Don't take any stranger into your confidence until you have passed out the money, and look out who sits next to you."

It was something new for him to caution me, and I could not but wonder at it; but in the bustle of getting on the train I forgot what he said. Ordinary prudence had induced me to place the money, which was all in bank bills, and divided into three packages, where the deft hand of a pickpocket could not reach it.

Interested in a newspaper time flew by as the train flew West, and at length the hoarse voice of a brakeman warned me that I had reached Grafton. I had leaped down and was making my way to the livery stable when I heard a familiar voice, and looked up to see Raleigh. He was seated in a buggy, and had, seemingly, waited for me to come up.

"Don't express your surprise," he began, as I stopped at the wheel. "I did intend to go away, but I changed my mind, and I like this section so well that I am going out to-day to look at a farm, with a view of purchasing.—Come, ride up to the hotel."

We rode up, ordered a lunch, and while we were discussing it Mr. Raleigh discovered that the farm he was going to see was just beyond the Scripts's.

How fortunate! I could ride out with him, see the farm, and return in his company, and he would be greatly pleased.

I was also pleased. If any one had told me, as we got into the buggy, that George Raleigh meant to return with my money in his pocket and my blood upon his hands, I should believe him to be a lunatic. And yet George Raleigh had planned to do that very same thing.

It was a lovely day in June, and the cool breeze and the sigh of green groves made my heart grow larger.

My companion was very talkative, but he didn't even hint at my errand.

"Oh, excuse me," he exclaimed, after he had passed a mile or so beyond the village and were among the farm houses, "I should have offered you this before."

He drew from his pocket a small flask of wine and handed it to me. Now, I was temperate in regard to drinks. In fact, I detested the sight and smell of anything intoxicating; but I had not the moral courage to tell him so and hand back the flask undisturbed. I feared to offend him, and so I drank, perhaps three good swallows.

He called my attention to the woods on the left, as he received back the flask, and when I looked around again he was just removing it from his mouth.

In about five minutes I began to feel queer. The fence along the road seemed to grow larger; something got into my ears, so the rattle of the buggy sounded a long way off.

"How strange! why, I believe I am going to be sick!" I exclaimed, holding on to the seat with all my might.

"You do look strange," he replied, a sickly smile stealing over his face. "I shouldn't wonder if it was apoplexy."

I did not suspect the game he had played. His words were like an echo, and his face seemed twice as large as it usually was. My head began to snap and crack, and I was greatly frightened.

"You are badly off," he continued, looking into my face. "I will drive as fast as possible and get a doctor."

My tongue was so heavy I could not reply, I clutched the seat, shut my eyes and he put his horse at his best pace.

We met a farmer's team, and I can remember that one of the occupants of the wagon called out to know what ailed me. Raleigh did not reply, but urged his horse forward.

About three miles from Grafton was a long stretch of forest, and this was soon reached. The pain in my head was not so violent, and I was not so badly affected with opening my eyes. I had settled into a sort of dumb stupor, with a brain so benumbed that I had to say to myself "this is a tree, this is a stump, etc.," before I could make sure that I was not wrong.

Half a mile down the road we struck the forest, and then Raleigh turned the horse into a blind road leading back into the woods. I could not understand what he intended. I tried to grapple with the question, but I could not solve it.

"Well, here we are," exclaimed Raleigh, when we had reached a point forty rods from the road.

He stopped the horse, got out and fastened him, and then came around to the wheel.

"You don't feel just right, but I guess you will be better soon," he remarked; "come, let me help you down."

He reached up his arms and I let go of the seat and fell into them. It seemed to me as if I weighed a ton, but he carried me along without an effort and laid me down within about a rod of the fence which ran along on one side of an old pasture.

Just now the effect of the drug was wearing off, and I began to feel a little better, and I got a faint suspicion that something unusual had happened. But I was powerless to move a limb; the sensation was like that when your foot goes to sleep.

"Can you speak?" inquired Raleigh, bending over me; "because if you can it will save me some trouble. I want to know where you have stowed that money."

Now I began to realize my situation. His face looked natural again and the load was off my tongue.

"George Raleigh! are you going to rob me?" I asked, finding my voice at last.

"Well, some folks might call it robbing, but we dress up the term a little by calling it the only correct financial way of equalizing the floating currency, so that each one is provided for, and no one left out."

"You shan't have the money; I'll die first!"

"Ah, I see—you didn't take quite enough," he coolly remarked. "Well, I have provided for this."

He went to the buggy, procured rope and a gag, and knelt down beside me. I had but little strength yet, and he conquered me in a moment. Laying me on my right side, looking toward the fence, he tied my hands, and then forced the gag into my mouth.

"There, now, you see you are nicely fixed up, and all because you acted like a fool instead of a sensible young lawyer soon to be admitted to the bar."

While he was speaking—indeed while he was tying me—I had caught the sight of a white face of a little girl peeping at us between the rails of the fence. I could see her great blue eyes. There [illegible] around her mouth and [illegible] the little hand resting on the rail, and I knew she was the farmer's daughter searching for strawberries.

[illegible] I feared she would be seen or heard. While Raleigh was tying the last knot, I winked at the girl as hard as I could, hoping she would see me and move away. But she did not go.

"Well, now for the money," said Raleigh, and he began searching my pockets. He went from one to the other, removing all the articles, and finally passed his hand over my bosom and discovered the money.

"Isn't there [illegible]!" he exclaimed, drawing out the packages, and he was cool enough to go at it and count the money. As he counted the girl waved her hand to me.

My heart was thumping, for I expected she would utter a word or a shout; but she sank down from sight, and I caught a glimpse of her frock as she passed thro' the grass.

"You see, my young friend," remarked Raleigh, as he drew off one of his boots and deposited some of the bills in it, "there's nothing like transacting business as it should be transacted. Some men would have shot or stabbed you, but it's only the apprentices who do such work. All the gentlemen of our calling do business as gentlemen should."

He drew off the other boot and placed some fifties in it and then continued:

"I have it all planned how to deal with you as soon as I get this money disposed of around my person. I shall lay you on your back and pour the balance of this wine down your throat. There's enough of it to make you sleep till to-morrow night, and by that time I shall be hundreds of miles away. As soon as I see that the drug has taken effect I shall untie your hands and remove the gag. When you come out of your sleep—if you ever do—you had better crawl out to the road, where you will be most likely to meet with some traveler. I want you to see the horse and buggy, otherwise I would leave them for you."

How coolly he talked! He treated the matter as if it was a regular business transaction in which I fully acquiesced. He had me a fast prisoner, and I felt he could do just as he pleased.

While I was thinking, I saw the little white face appear between the rails again, but in a second it faded away and its place was taken by the sunburned phiz of a farmer.

He looked from me to Raleigh and back again, and I winked to him in a way which he readily understood. His face disappeared and I felt that I should be saved.

"No, old George won't get his tin to-day," mused Raleigh, pushing away the bills in his pockets. "You will go back to Law & Law, feeling got out and cut up. But they should not blame you—it is not your fault at all. True, had you minded your business on the cars and had not been so free with a stranger, this would not have happened. I was on my way to Milwaukee, and had no thoughts of such rich pickings here."

"Now, in just about a minute we'll be through with this business," he remarked, trying to get the mouth of the flask between my jaws.

I rolled my head to one side and he did not succeed. He was jamming the flask between my teeth, when I caught the sound of a soft step, the crash of a club, and Raleigh rolled off my body.

He tried to leap up, but three or four farmers struck him down, and one of the blows rendered him senseless. Before he came to I was free of ropes and gag, and we had him nicely bound.

Over beyond the pasture a farmer and his hands were raking up hay. "Little blue eyes," only eight years old, had wandered off after strawberries, and had fortunately witnessed part of Raleigh's proceedings. She had hurried back to her father and told him that "a man was all tied up, there," and had returned to the fence.

Understanding the situation, he and his men had moved around so as to secure an advantage. Raleigh's capture was the result.

When the rascal found his senses he was terribly taken back, and he cursed enough for a whole Flanders army.

We took him back to Grafton, and when I last saw him he was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a sentence of fifteen years.

The mortgage was lifted after all, and the gift that Law & Law sent to little Katie Gray kept her in dresses for many a year.

It never rains but it pours. A Newport visitor after a long struggle, managed to get a foothold in society, and all of a sudden found that she had been invited to nine dinner parties, all on the same evening. DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

FOR CONGRESS

SECOND DISTRICT,
LEWIS PARKER,
Of Mercer County.

THIRD DISTRICT,
MILES ROSS,
Of Middlesex County.

FOURTH DISTRICT,
HENRY S. HARRIS,
Of Warren County.

FIFTH DISTRICT,
JOHN RYLE,
Of Passaic County.

DRAW GENTLY.

The Republican candidate for Congress in this District is no doubt a young gentleman of respectability, the owner of a large barrel of money, the son of a rich father, and the nephew of a very aristocratic uncle, yet plainly deficient in the important qualifications of a practical Congressman. Had the Republicans discerned the remotest prospect of defeating the election of Hon. Miles Ross, their selected opponent would have been a different kind of personage—a man of mature judgment and knowledge of public affairs. They knew when the Convention met and they know now that the nominated youth has about as much chance of becoming Prime Minister of England as he has to represent the Third District in the Congress of the United States, and for decency's sake we trust they will draw moderately upon the financial resources of the newly fledged aspirant for political honors. Bleed him gently! Don't burst his Bank!

DEMOCRATIC LOYALTY.

We contended earnestly for the right of Union county to this year's Congressional nomination, sincerely believing that justice and propriety counseled such action, and knowing that Union had several citizens in every particular qualified for the position and willing to accept it. But a Democratic Convention, duly constituted and held, by an emphatic vote, decided otherwise and re-nominated the sitting member. As loyal Democrats we now, as ever, unhesitatingly and cordially support regular party nominees, and urge like fidelity upon all our political friends. The Elizabeth Herald well remarks—"Before a nomination we may quarrel among ourselves as to personal preferences, but when we enter the door of a convention and submit to the will of those assembled we are, as honorable men and Democrats, bound to respect the choice that convention makes." That is our platform.

For Congress,
MILES ROSS.

A collision between two trains, one of the New Haven Railroad and one of the Rapid Transit line—the former having been switched over to the Rapid Transit track—occurred on Friday last in the Fourth avenue tunnel, near Eighty-sixth street. A car of the New Haven train was wrecked and Mme. Marie Aubert was instantly killed, also William Howe, of New York city. About twenty persons were also seriously injured.

There is not a shadow of doubt but that County Clerk Vosseller will be re-nominated in the next County Convention for a re-election. He has many friends, and has given universal satisfaction in the discharge of his duties the past five years of his office. His political opponents cannot produce a man to succeed him.

Surrogate Gerber has given great satisfaction to the public during his past five year's administration of office. He should be, as he will be, re-nominated. His re-election will surely ensue.

LOCAL ANNEX.

Minstrels.

The public should not forget the entertainment to be given in Van Deventer Hall during Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week, by the J. H. Morgan Combination of talented artists in minstrelsy. The proceeds are to be devoted towards the erection of the North Plainfield Catholic church, and demands extensive patronage for that reason as well as on account of the enjoyable performance to be offered.

Meeting of the Board of Freeholders.

The Boards of Freeholders of Union & Somerset counties met in joint session at Miller's Hotel, this city, on Wednesday last. After hearing statements of losses by the recent freshet, from all parts of the two counties, both Boards visited the sites of all the county line bridges destroyed on Green Brook. The Union county Board resolved to erect iron bridges in place of those destroyed, except Clinton avenue, which will be repaired. From estimates received as to losses, the total loss in Union county will be about $50,000. The loss in Plainfield is about $10,000.

Run Away.

On Wednesday afternoon, a spirited team attached to a buggy in which was the owner Mr. J. G. Cadmus, became frightened and started at a mad pace for the city just after leaving the Fair Grounds. Their capable driver, however, succeeded in checking them before reaching the Park House, but at Fourth street they again became unmanageable and dashed through Park avenue losing a front wheel by a collision in that thoroughfare and a hind one after turning into Front street. The wreck was stopped near Steale's pharmacy, and Mr. Cadmus released from his perilous position still holding a firm grip on the reins. His physical damage was but slight.

All the Plainfield ladies are cordially invited to visit and inspect the large variety of the coming seasons' styles that will be displayed.

The waters which came down Somerset street, after the destruction of Codington's ice houses, extended as far as Blake's Hotel, and thence down Green Brook road to the stream again. Blake's Hotel was not injured; but the lower part of Gustave Sutterlin's residence next to it was flooded and considerable damage done.

A Golden Wedding.

On Wednesday afternoon and evening of this week, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. R. Clarkson, at their residence No. 62 New street, entertained about a hundred guests gathered to congratulate the host and hostess upon the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding day. Five children, all that had been born, were present, besides a number of grand and great-grand children. Eighty sat down to a bountiful supper during the evening.

Burglaries.

During Thursday night of last week, burglars entered the bar-room of Mr. P. Day on Third street, and escaped with about $300 in cash and a check for $200 that was in the draw of the counter, besides some liquors and cigars. Mr. Day has always kept a large sum of money in hand, being frequently called upon to accommodate some of the Press Work's men with cash in exchange for the checks they receive in payment of wages. In the future this practice will probably be discontinued.

A resident of Union avenue was the victim during the following night, when the continued rain on the roofs drowned (literally) all sound of the footsteps of marauders. Thieves entered the bedroom where he lay sleeping, and appropriated the contents of the clothes he had removed. The loss amounted to about $100 in money value, but a number of papers were also taken of much importance to the owner.

North Plainfield's Catholic Church.

The "late storm" that would not hold up for any other occasion, [illegible] raging during Sunday last, and the corner stone was laid of the North Plainfield church that Father O'Hanlon's labors have resulted in starting. A special train brought to the Plainfield station a large number of members from R. C. Associations of Bergen Point, Elizabeth and the Port. These with the Ancient Order of Hibernians, St. Mary's T. A. B. Society and the St. Aloysius Cadets of this city, formed a large procession, brightened by handsome regalia, under command of James Connolly, Esq., Grand Marshall of the day. At the location of the proposed building, Bishop O'Farrel of the diocese of Trenton delivered a fluent and impressive address which retained the interest of the large gathering present. The ceremonies were unusually imposing and the occasion most propitious.

In the stone was placed a copy of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, the N. Y. Freeman's Journal and a few coins, besides a record in Latin of which the following is a translation:

On the 24th day of September, of the year of grace, eighteen hundred and eighty-second, Leo XIII, Supreme Pontiff, happily reigning, Chester Allen Arthur, President of these United States, George C. Ludlow, Governor of this State of New Jersey, the Right Rev. and Illustrious Michael J. O'Farrell, Bishop of Trenton, assisted by the Rev. Thomas J. O'Hanlon, pastor of this church, blessed and laid this corner stone.

In the evening, Mrs. Eugene P. Gries entertained at her residence a large number of those present and prominent in the ceremonies.

The erection of the structure will rapidly progress under the capable supervision of Mr. P. Sheridan the contractor.

A WITNESS FOR MUHLENBERG.

EVA'S WILL.

To the Christian people who have so generously assisted and remembered me during my long illness and the Managers and nurses of Muhlenberg Hospital for their Christian patience and care of me, I leave all I have, my deep and full heart's gratitude, and I appoint you my executor to publish this in the papers when I am dead, hoping that possibly it may some time be the means of helping [illegible] All has been done for me that could be done. I want for nothing but to be in Heaven, and I am almost there. You may sign my name. EVA HACKETT.

Such was the thoughtfulness of a dying girl who summoned Mrs. M. and me to her bed side at Muhlenberg Hospital, but a little while before she died. She was surrounded by all the comforts that the attentive nurses could command, and through difficult breathing this young woman dictated the above. In the assurance of a happy eternity where there is no sorrow or pain, she said to my suggestion that she might be here yet a while, "No! No! Don't say that, I long for the hour when I shall go over the river. 'Tis but a step, I am almost there, I know it is all right with me." I have on several occasions sat by the bed side of the dying, and penned the last testaments of those who gave away their property with studied care; but never before have I been called professionally to write the bequest of gratitude alone of a dying girl to dear christian people and the managers and attendants of an institution, who smoothed her pathway to the grave. She died on Friday the 22d day of Sept. 1882.

WM. B. MAXSON.

A Tin Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. White of Sixth street and Franklin Place celebrated the 10th anniversary of their wedding on Monday evening, September 25th. Among the large number of guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Koch, Mr. Hesse, the Misses Hickling, Mr. and Mrs. Bell and Mr. and Mrs. Robbins, of Brooklyn. Mr. E. Gilmore of New York. Miss Koch of Baltimore. Mr. W. K. Scott of Brooklyn, Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. John Ross, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Frommer, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Thorne, Mrs. Van Sandt, the Misses Van Sandts, Miss Rogers, Mr. Anthony, Mrs. E. Hendrickson, Mr. M. Hendrickson, Mr. Louis R. Ross, Miss Mettie Ross and Miss Minnie Runyon of Plainfield. Owing to the inclemency of the weather a large number who were invited were prevented from being present. The parlors were tastefully decorated with flags and flowers, the floral gifts comprising some of the rarest and choicest exotics. The host and hostess after receiving numerous congratulations marched with their guests through the parlor to the sweet strains of Mendel's wedding march, which was played by a popular Brooklyn musician, Prof. DeBois. Dancing was then entered into with the usual good spirit and continued until the "wee sma' hours" of the morning. The Virginia Reel, as usual, was very lively and many of the older guests took part. A very sumptuous repast, which did great credit to the worthy hostess was done ample justice to by the guests during the evening. The presents were numerous and mostly of tin ware, consisting of [illegible] a beautiful jewel case, [illegible] articles, useful as well as ornamental.

The Glorious Fourth

THE UNION AND MIDDLESEX COUNTIES' MUTUAL AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION'S FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR ------ THE WEATHER'S EFFECT ON THE EXHIBITS ------ FINE TROTTING CONTESTS.

The weather that had had so depressing an effect on the State Fair during the last week, continued during Monday and Tuesday, in consequence of which the entry of exhibits at Fourth Annual Fair of the U. & M. C. M. A. A., was not as favorable as under other circumstances. During Monday the date set apart for receiving exhibits, the rain was falling as though it had neglected its duty in that line and must make up for lost time. The programme of the week was then moved forward a day all around extending the Fair to Saturday and the entry of goods until Tuesday afternoon. As we go to press (Thursday) the weather promises to clear before to-morrow, and we shall therefore postpone until our next issue any detailed description of the Exhibition, the Exhibitors, and the Exhibits—knowing that the scene when seen in the light of the sun will be more fully appreciated and can be done greater justice. We may mention that the poultry display in particular is very fine, and the collection of livestock in general, well worth visiting. As to the Speed Contests, too much in their praise cannot be said. To James S. Vosseller, the Speed Secretary, the Association owes the honor it has this year attained—namely, having the largest number of race entries of any other agricultural fair in the State. As in past years, H. Dayton Crowell is the efficient Superintendent of the Track, and fills the position to the entire satisfaction of all.

Personalia.

Miss Lizzie VanDyne, a former resident of this city, died suddenly at her home in Brooklyn last week, in the twentieth year of her age. The funeral was to have taken place at the Trinity Reformed church on Saturday, but by reason of the basement of that building being flooded by the rains, the services were held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall instead. An affecting address was delivered by the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, and some appropriate vocal music rendered by friends of the deceased. The remains were subsequently interred at Metuchen.

Rev. and Mrs. A. V. V. Raymond during Wednesday afternoon, were called upon to bear the terrible affliction caused by the death of their little daughter, Mary Miller. The deceased, an only child, died of cholera infantum, at the age of fifteen months. The funeral will take place from the residence of the parents, Ninth street near Park avenue, this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

The candidate for Assembly from the First District of Warren county, is Isaac Wildrick, Esq., father of the genial and courteous Col. Wildrick of Blairstown. If the nominee is as generous and popular as his son (and we have no doubt of it), he will receive the largest majority ever given in the district.

Mrs. Geo. H. Burgess of Central avenue has a six-year old Night Blooming Cereus, which never opens at a time less than thirty flowers and sometimes as many as fifty. During Wednesday night it bloomed for the fourth time this season, and thirty-one of the magnificent buds opened.

Councilman Robert Simpson returned on Monday from his visit to Chester, Morris Co., where he was a guest of Mr. Hiram H. DeCamp. He is looking and feeling all right after his severe accident, which necessitated his leaving business for a time to recuperate his health.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Coriswell of this city are the proud father and mother of a handsome baby boy; and Mr. and Mrs. John H. Carney of North Plainfield, are overjoyed at the coming of their first, a beautiful girl. So, "honors are easy" both sides of the brook.

Mrs. Job Male, wife of ex-Mayor and one of the principal property owners of Plainfield, died at her late residence on Saturday last. The funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Rob't Collyer of New York, took place on the following Tuesday.

Mr. Geo. B. DeRevere, formerly the bountiful host of the Park House, was in this city on Wednesday and visited the County Fair. He was looking exceedingly well and reported a most successful season at his new hotel in Rye, N. Y.

Mr. Edward Nelson has during the past few days been cordially welcomed back to his office after a short vacation. He is looking so unusually well and handsome, that he probably experienced the good time he deserved.

Mr. E. P. Thorn has recently purchased the "Dr. Giraud property" at 118 East Front street, which he will greatly improve and occupy as a residence in the future.

The Judges of the Court of Common Pleas on Wednesday last, appointed Geo. M. Stiles, of Plainfield, Morgue Keeper, in place of David Leeson, deceased.

The many friends of Mr. Marc Martin, are congratulating him upon a good inheritance divided received recently. It is a boy—12 lbs—all doing well.

Mr. Henry Clay Randolph, who had been lying severely ill at his residence recently, has now taken a turn for the better and is visibly improving.

We received a call on Wednesday from Mr. Elston M. Dunn, a former resident and an ex-postmaster of Plainfield.

Mr. William H. Voorhees has returned with his family to this city, from Asbury Park.

DEATHS.

WEBSTER—At New Providence, New Jersey, September [illegible], 1882, Emma, wife of A. M. Webster, aged 25 years, 3 months and 17 days.

RAYMOND—On Wednesday, Sept. 27th, of cholera infantum, Mary Miller Raymond, aged 15 months. Daughter of Rev. A. V. V. and Margaret B. Raymond.

Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to attend the funeral service at the residence of her parents, 9th St., near Park Ave., Plainfield, N. J., on Friday, 29th inst., at 2:30 P. M.

IN this issue, T. George Dodworth announces the reopening of his classes in deportment and dancing at Stillman Hall, commencing Wednesday, October 18th.

THE citizens of Bound Brook have secured the services of Somerville steam fire engine, No. 1, to pump the water out of cellars of buildings flooded by the recent freshet.

WE understand that no money is to be spent during the campaign in this Congressional District. Ross doesn't need to, and Kean, Jr., doesn't propose to waste his in a forlorn hope.

THE Town Committee of North Plainfield Township have called a money election for the 10th of October, to vote for the raising of $5,000 to make necessary repairs to roads washed out by the flood.

THE Town Committee of North Plainfield have caused to be constructed a temporary bridge over the chasm washed out in the Somerset road bed at Factory Hill, so that teams may now safely pass over it.

THE proprietor of Blatz's Hotel, on Somerset street, North Plainfield, is always adding some improvement for the attraction and benefit of his patrons. His latest is a brick bowling alley and billiard room, built after the most improved style, by Mr. M. W. Schenck.

ALERT Hose Co. No. 1, will send a delegation of thirty men, accompanied by their handsome carriage to participate in the firemen's parade at Morristown, Oct. 11th. They will be the guests of Resolute H. & L. Co. No. 1. Voss' celebrated brass band of Newark will accompany them.

THAT was prompt action taken by Freeholders Stover and Hubbard in causing to be erected a temporary bridge over Cedar Brook at Park avenue within 24 hours after the former structure was carried away by the flood. Such public servants are the right kind to have.

WE hope the Anti-Ross Democratic Club of this city has not dissolved for want of a quorum. Something should be done by these anything-to-elect-a-Republican Democrats, to overcome in some degree the hundreds of Republican votes that will be cast in New Brunswick for Miles Ross.

FREEHOLDER Schenck of North Plainfield, is the right man in the right place. He, as well as Road Overseer John Whitlock, took active measures to ascertain what damages had been done by the flood and took all the necessary steps [illegible] of travel over the damaged thoroughfares and bridges as soon as possible.

MR. Geo. Demeza desires to announce through our columns that he will have his Kindling Wood Factory in full operation again in about two weeks. He will, in the meantime, continue to fill all orders sent him. Mr. Demeza is greatly to be sympathized with in his misfortune, and should receive a liberal share of the public patronage.

WE have gotten rid of the Gravel Pits, are making some progress against the Oil-Cloth Factory, and hope to have a Democratic municipal government some day to rid our corners of the loafers. But in the face of so much reason for congratulation comes the news that O'Wilde, the transcendental and quite too intense Ockey, is to visit Plainfield.

THE trains of the Pennsylvania R. R. Company ceased running through our city over the C. R. R. on Tuesday forenoon. It is said that the Pennsylvania Co. acted very discourteous to the Central Co. in not notifying the latter when they would cease running over their road, but suddenly sent their trains over their own road when they had repaired their bridges.

MR. Gustave Sotterlin's beer-bottling establishment on the Green Brook road, North Plainfield, is kept working at its utmost capacity to supply the large family and saloon orders it daily receives. Mr. Sotterlin supplies five different kinds of table and other beer, so by leaving an order for just what you want at Force's Hotel, it will be delivered free of charge.

THE latest dispatches from friends of John Kean, Jr. (spelled Cain) is that he desires most earnestly to be elected to Congress, so that he can vote on the next appropriation bill for a sufficient sum to erect new dams along Elizabeth Creek, which were destroyed by the late flood. He will be many miles behind his desires after the ides of November. He can then d—— his friends.(?)

MCGREGOR & Co., the Iron Front Clothiers of Newark, make a seasonable bow before the public in our advertising columns of to-day. This firm's garments stand amid the highest for their elegance and style, cut and finish, and lowness of price. The convenient situation of this establishment, being only four doors from the terminus of the road from Plainfield to Newark, is another cause of its popularity with our citizens.

IT will require many dollars to repair the macadamized road bed of Somerset Street. The facilities once afforded this city to macadamize roads, in the way of stone crusher, roller and the material from which to make the roads, are not now at hand, excepting the latter. Somerset street is too prominent a thoroughfare to be neglected. We trust the proper authorities will not let it go back to the "old days," but repair it with suitable material, at whatever expense.

DUNELLEN has sustained a loss in the removal therefrom, with his family, of Mr. John Roberts, whose business interests necessitates his taking up his residence in New York City. Mr. Roberts is one of those whole-souled, genial gentlemen, who are much desired in a community as a neighbor and citizen, and in his removal Dunellen not only loses an enterprising and respected citizen, but neighbors miss his companionship. It is their wish, however, that their loss may be his gain.

IN the Somerset County Courts last Friday, Judge Magie sentenced Peter S VanZandt, who was charged with manslaughter in causing the death of John Jerolaman, of Prospect, by administering arsenic to him in medicine, to pay a fine of $500 and costs. Among the indictments found by the Grand Jury during their recent sitting, was one against Samuel Baker for shooting at A. T. E. Schenck, the young lawyer whom Baker charges with ruining his daughter, and one against Schenck himself, and a boy named David Richards for conspiracy in taking Baker's daughter from home and effecting her ruin.

THE Firemen's Convention at Elizabeth on Wednesday, was well attended by representatives from fire departments all over the State. The Convention was called to order by Bird. W. Spencer, of Paterson, N. J. Mayor Ryder, of Elizabeth, in a neat speech, welcomed the representatives to the city. The Plainfield Department was represented by E. H. Sebring. Other representatives were prevented from attending by sickness. The following named gentlemen were reported as officers of the Convention and accepted:

President—Bird. W. Spencer.
Vice Presidents—Charles W. Byles, Trenton; G. F. Ross, Hudson; John Stevens, Camden; Frederick H. Beach, Dover; John T. Gunn, Elizabeth.
Treasurer—John McKiernan, Paterson.
Secretary—Horace H. Brown, Newark.
Financial Sec.—W. H. Black, Burlington.

WE will give fuller particulars as to the doings of the Convention, next week.

The Equinoctial Storm!

Unprecedented Rain Fall—Great Destruction of Property and Loss of Life—Bridges and Dams Carried Away by the Flood—Buildings Damaged and Destroyed—Railroad Travel Impeded—Communication Between Counties Destroyed by Destruction of Bridges—The Loss Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars—The Water Higher than Ever Before Known by the Oldest Living Inhabitant.

The rain storm which commenced early Friday morning and lasting without intermission until late Saturday night, was without doubt, the most severe, and produced more disastrous results, than any previous storm within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant of the section of country which it visited, and will be long remembered by the victims of to-day. The weather bureau reports that the storm first made its appearance off the Carolina coast and passing over the Middle States expended its force in the ocean, about Portland, Me. The principal damage by the storm was done in New Jersey.

The amount of rain which fell during the 24 hours ending at 11 p. m. on Saturday was more than 8 inches. Between 11 p. m. on Friday and 7 a. m. on Saturday the rain-fall was .39 of an inch; between 7 a. m. and 3 p. m., 1.72 inches, and between 3 p. m. and 11 p. m. 4.16 inches, making in all 6.17 inches for the 24 hours. On Thursday the total rain-fall was .78 of an inch and on Friday 1.69 inches, making the total rain-fall during the three days ending at 11 p. m. on Saturday 8.34 inches. This was reported by signal service officers at the New York building. Other reports say that over 16 inches of water fell during the two days. In and about Plainfield the damage was severe and expensive. To attempt to give a detailed list of all losses occasioned by the storm in this State would overtax our pen, information or space. We shall endeavor to give a correct statement of the disastrous effects of the flood in this immediate vicinity, beginning at

CODDINGTON BROS. ICE HOUSES,

Which were situated on Stony Brook, in North Plainfield Township. A few years ago, when the above firm entered into the ice business, a large building —x— in dimensions was constructed for the storage of the commodity, just below the strong dam across Stony Brook at Coddington's Flour Mill. As business increased another building —x— in size was built adjoining it, also large sheds —x— in size, for the storage of ice. There was on Friday about 300 tons of ice in the first or upper building. No fears were entertained as to any flood washing away the dam. The turbulent waters, however found another outlet from the pond to the brook, by the breaking away of the banks of the raceway, which fed the mill with water for motive power. As the break occurred immediately behind the ice houses, the rush of water filled the middle building with water, which soon bursted out the sides of the structure and caused its total collapse, the ice stored within sliding into the stream with the wreck of the building. The wooden truss bridge across the stream opposite the residence of the late Mr. Wadley, was speedily swept away, the waters sparing the stone arch bridge across the stream at Johnston Drive. This bridge, however, was destroyed the next day. The flood soon was over the macadamized road bed of Somerset street, and became a rushing torrent four feet in depth. A small two story tenement house, opposite the Wadley place, which is now owned by Mr. L. B. Boice, was in danger of being carried away, and it was with great difficulty, it's inmates, consisting of the family of Mr. Chas. Willis, were rescued. The damage done at this time was to be exceeded, however, the next day, Saturday, when the increasing flood, sweeping away two large bridges across the stream at Washingtonville, about half a mile above the scene of Friday's disaster, caused damages amounting to thousands of dollars. One of these bridges was situated across the stream opposite the residence of Wm. Spencer, the other about 500 feet below, opposite M. H. French's Flour Mills. The swollen stream carried the débris of these structures with irresistible force down the stream and over the dam at Coddingtons, (which stoutly resisted the rushing torrent,) Together with the waters from the break in the raceway sapping the foundations of the remaining ice buildings, it was too much for them to withstand, and finally they went down with a crash, carrying away with them a wooden bridge in the stream just below their site, a large blacksmith shop belonging to Mr. T. Stiles, and other small out buildings along the stream, causing dismay and terror to the inmates of the above mentioned small tenement house, who were with great difficulty again rescued through the exertions of Mr. Adam Fritz and George Becker.

The scene below in Wooden's Grove is one of desolation. There are to be seen wrecks of carriages, wagons, buildings, &c., the débris left by the receding waters.

Between the site of the two above mentioned bridges, and Coddington's dam, is situated another dam known as Wetumpka Falls. This dam is in a great part a natural one, a mass of solid rock formed by nature, being its base. Here the waters have a fall of some twenty feet, tumbling over jagged rocks and boulders, and passing downward through a gorge, furnishing magnificent scenery to the visitor. This spot is known as Factory Hill, and before this flood, boasted of a fine, smooth road-bed, with but a slight incline to reach the top of the locality known as the "Notch House." The fierce waters tore away the flood gates at the side of the dam, overflowing the road, and before it began to subside, had washed a hole out of the road thirty feet in depth, and entirely across it, so that it is almost impossible for even a pedestrian to pass between this chasm and the wall of rock which marks the other side of the road. The loss here is almost irreparable. It will cost thousands of dollars to re-construct an artificial road-bed for future travel through this thoroughfare to "o'er the mountain." Below Coddington's Mills the macadamized road bed is washed out for a distance of half a mile so that the road is comparatively ruined. It will cost thousands of dollars to re-build it. The scene below the Mills was harrowing in the extreme as the current swept with irresistible force down stream, the wreck of the ice houses, carriages, sleighs, baled hay and other material. Messrs. Coddington Bro's. loss is fully $30,000, on which, of course, there is no insurance. Farther down the stream, damage to the amount of at least $2,000 was done to the property of Mr. John F. Wilson, who, at a great expense, had straightened the line of the brook and erected stone walls along its sides for a distance of nearly half a mile. The waters carried away the bridge over the stream at Grove street extension and tore out considerable of the above mentioned stone walls, also fences, shrubbery, grass plots, etc. The bridge at the intersection of Grove street and Green Brook road withstood the pressure. Below it was swept away all the bridges over the stream, to its junction with Green Brook, as follows: Rock View Avenue and West End, at which 150 feet of elevated road bed is also washed away. All these are Somerset county bridges. The bridge at Green Brook road and Grove street is the only structure of its kind left over the stream to its intersection with Green Brook.

Along Green Brook which flows through this city, even much greater damage was done than on Stony Brook, commencing at which are situated on that stream above Scotch Plains. Although the waters were high, no fears were entertained of the breaking away of the dam above the mills, as it is a natural formation of rocks. Should the large reservoir of water stored above it, beyond Feltville, break away, with its thirty feet high dam, it was expected, that the rush of waters would do much damage. The first intimation of danger to the mills, came about seven o'clock, Friday night, when, by the bursting of a dam situated about a quarter of a mile above the mills and known as "the back pond," a tremendous body of water then came down the stream, and flooded the lower floor of the mill, carrying away in its course through the drying rooms, 80 tons of unmanufactured card board, and sweeping away valuable machinery. The large drying platform and sheds were entirely swept away, and the mill left in nearly a complete ruined state, the lower end of the structure being torn out. Portions of machinery was found after the flood a half mile below the mill. The fine road leading to the mills was washed out and utterly ruined for a distance. The scene of this usually busy bee-hive of industry is desolate indeed. Mr. Seeley's loss cannot be replaced under $20,000. The flood swept downward with irresistible power, through the picturesque valley in which the stream usually quietly flows, tearing away the fur mill dam below Seeley's mill, which has withstood many a former freshet. This increased the volume of water, and everything in its course was swept away like chaff.

AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

It swept away a fine bridge across the stream near the late residence of Mr. Edward Mullinsbeen, carrying it bodily down the stream a distance of 100 yards and lodging it across the stream between two trees on either side of it. All the roads bridges crossing the stream on the premises of the above named gentleman were swept away. A little ways below it was the large wooden bridge opposite the fur mills of Messrs. Harper, Hollingsworths & Darby. The foundations were washed out and the upper end of it let down, completely wrecking it. The immense body of water then rushed through fields and pastures, also along the road until the main street of the village leading from Frost's Hotel to Plainfield was a running stream of from one to three feet in depth. It was with great difficulty that residents along the line of the brook could rescue their live stock when the flood tore through the fields. The main road from Britain's Hotel to Terrell road was a running stream of water which tore away fences, carried away shocks of corn from the fields, and washed great holes in the road bed and sidewalks. This formerly fine, smooth thoroughfare is now a complete wreck, resembling a rough, stony mountain road as far as Cole's Hill. The large body of water which was thus turned out of the natural course, found an outlet through Terrell road toward the railroad and through other avenues again to Green Brook. The water which went through Terrell road added its strength afterward to the waters of Cedar Brook in swelling the havoc even that small stream did, and of which we shall speak hereafter. The county line bridges between Scotch Plains and Plainfield, located at Mountain avenue, Terrell road, Raymond avenue, Netherwood avenue, Leland avenue, Farragut avenue and Richmond street, all bravely withstood the strain upon them, and are yet standing and passable. The wing wall of the Water street bridge (now Elm) is washed away for about 30 feet, and the structure is in a dangerous condition.

THE DAMAGE AT PLAINFIELD,

Is immense, and great excitement prevailed during the two days of flood. Green Brook became a raging, swollen torrent, and every precaution was taken by property owners to protect themselves from the encroachment of the waters. About 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, the waters began rapidly to rise, and it became apparent that there was danger to bridges and property along the stream. At Robert's livery stables the water rose so rapidly that it entered the lower stalls of the stables, necessitating the removal of the horses stabled there. There was no time to remove the large number of vehicles under the sheds below the stables and it was with great difficulty that a few of them were drawn up to dry land by a person wading to them waist deep in water. Mr. John W. Laing, owner of the premises, stated that never before in his many years of residence here, has he seen the water so high. The large amount of timber and débris which came floating down the stream lodged against the abutment of the Grove street stone arch bridge and stopped the flow of water through the arches to a great extent.

Through the efforts of members of Zephyr H. & L. Co. No. 1, who appeared at the bridge with hooks and ropes, upon the sounding of an alarm from the fire bell, a quantity of the lodgment was removed, when word came that Demeza's kindling wood factory, situated on Somerset street, a block above, had been washed away, and that a workman named William Frese had been carried into the waters with it. A moment later, a large section of the First Baptist Church carriage sheds, immediately below the bridge and along side the stream fell in with a crash. At this time there was perhaps a hundred people standing on and about the bridge, watching the grand spectacle of rushing waters from the three arches. Although repeatedly warned by parties of their extreme danger, and entreated to come away from the bridge, their curiosity overcome their prudence. As the wreck of Demeza's factory came down the stream and lodged against the upper part of the bridge, the strain upon the structure became too great. The rushing waters below was gradually sucking away the stone foundations, and at about two o'clock, without the slightest warning, the west or Somerset side arch of the bridge fell in. A cry of horror went up from the hundreds assembled at this time, as the upturned faces of what seemed a score of persons were seen amid the boiling and seething waters. A rush was instantly made for the Washington avenue bridge, a block below, to succor the struggling persons in the water. Two of those who went down with the bridge, Mrs. George Goodwin and W. F. Dedrick, a clerk in Reynold's drug store, were carried into comparatively still water just below the Baptist Church sheds, about 500 yards below the bridge, where Mrs. Goodman was assisted to the shore by Mr. Dedrick. A young man named Armstrong Mulford also succeeded in reaching the shore at this point. Among the limbs and roots of a large willow tree, which was carried away just below the bridge and lodged on the edge of the rapid current, near the Washington avenue bridge, were seen two men clinging fast, and apparently exhausted. The spectators shouted to them to hold fast, while Mr. John Wilson ran for ropes from his stables at the edge of the water. Willing hands were soon at work, clothing partially stripped off, and a rope carried out to the tree. It was first made fast to the person of Mr. Samuel H. Allen, and he was assisted ashore. The other person was Peter Schneiderwind, who was rescued in the same way. Shouts from below the bridge evidenced that there were still more persons to rescue, and a rush was made for that locality. Clinging fast to small evergreen trees were found an elderly man, Mr. Lewis Van Dyke, who when rescued and brought ashore, was so nearly drowned that it required the services of a physician to resuscitate him. Another young man named Eugene Brokaw, of Oak Tree, was also rescued near this point. A large crowd went down the stream as far as Girard Ave., in search of other parties, but none others were found to rescue. As no resident is known to be missing, it is presumable to think that the above mentioned were all those who were carried away by the fall of the bridge. Several parties, however, narrowly escaped going down with the others above mentioned. Mr. H. Williams, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and Frank Green, of the firm of Green & Co., furniture dealers, saving themselves by grasping the railings of the bridge and drawing themselves up, not, however, without a wetting. Great praise is due to those parties who so gallantly rushed into the waters to rescue those in the stream. Prominent among them were Messrs. J. W. Gavett, Wm. Craig, James Woolston, Robert Manning, Richard Coleman, John Kisley, T. J. Gillies, Andrew Wilson, Stephen Davis, W. C. Davis, Dan. Summers. Just previous to the arch of the bridge giving away, William Frese, was rescued from a tree in which he had lodged, back of Robert's stables by Edward Leland and others. Frese was badly cut about one of the feet. The machinery of Demeza's factory was scattered along the stream as far as Cadmus' mill, a mile below. The boiler and engine were carried nearly to the Grove street bridge. The waters continued to rise, and it began to be feared that the Somerset street stone arch bridge must also go, as the water rose so as to sweep over the top of it at least two feet in depth, flooding the buildings in the immediate vicinity. Demeza's three-story brick building, whose foundations are on a line with the brook, was considered as lost, and the family moved out. It was considered that if F. M. French's mill dam, which confined the waters known as Tier's Lake, was to give way, it would result in the destruction of L. M. French's three-story brick carriage factory, situated just above the Somerset street bridge, also other buildings adjoining it. About five o'clock the water began to fall, and it was thought the danger was past, but between nine and ten o'clock another rise in the stream carried away the dam. The waters again rushed over the Somerset street bridge, doing great damage. A large hole was washed out of the side of French's carriage factory and the lower floor submerged. Across the stream, above the bridge, were the blacksmith shop of Frank Hand the wheelwright shop of Warren Stewart, the upper parts of which were stored with material for construction of carriages, owned by L. M. French. The water tore away the supports of the building and let them down into the stream, materially interfering with the flow of the waters through the arches of the bridge. The waters thus confined rushed across Somerset street into the brook below. The foundations of Demeza's building was injured to some extent. The work of completing the destruction of the Grove street bridge by the dangerous flood was then effected, the entire section of the structure being swept away clean. Large holes are washed away from the banks of either side of where was once the bridge, on the city side to within fifteen feet of the foundation walls of the Baptist church. Some 150 feet of the church sheds were undermined and fell in. Below this point two fine bridges at Girard avenue, the one at Albert street, also that at Clinton avenue, are swept away. The only two bridges, standing on the stream within the County limits are the Washington avenue iron bridge and those at Cadmus's and Rock avenue.

A large force of men were engaged all day Sunday in removing the large amount of finished and unfinished work in French's four-story carriage factory, as it was feared that the building would fall. Happily such an event did not occur, although the structure is seriously damaged. The loss of Messrs F. M. French, French Bros., and L. M. French, in buildings, stock and dam will amount to at least $10,000. Messrs. Hand and Stewart suffered considerable loss in tools and material.

CEDAR BROOK.

While Green Brook was making so much damage, it was not thought that such an insignificant little stream as Cedar Brook, would create much of a disturbance. This stream rises in an open meadow near Netherwood, and runs through the south-east part of the city. It increases in volume as it extends to New Brooklyn Pond, which furnishes motive power to large flouring mills. Where the stream crosses Park avenue it is barely six inches deep by ten feet wide in ordinary weather. The heavy rains of Friday and Saturday, however, assisted by the overflow from the Scotch Plains inundation, caused it to rise to an extraordinary height on Saturday and do much damage. Three brick arch bridges across the stream at Broadway, Park avenue and Arlington avenue, were swept away like so much chaff when this "little stream got it's back up." As the first two named thoroughfares are prominent ones of the city, to the Fair Grounds, great inconvenience was at once anticipated by many, in affording a route for transportation to the Fair this week. Our efficient Freeholders, B. M. Stover and J. F. Hubbard, however, promptly set to work and recognizing the exigency of the work, engaged Mr. Isaac Melbourne to construct a temporary bridge over the chasm made at Park avenue. A sufficient force of men under the supervision of Messrs. Shepherd, Johnson & Godown, were at once set to work, and by nine o'clock at night a strong, substantial temporary bridge was constructed and travel resumed.

At New Market, a portion of the dam was torn away, the wooden bridge just below it swept off, and great damage done to the flouring mill. Mr. William Alberti is also a severe sufferer by the destruction of his lumber yard, all of his stock being carried away. The foundation of the iron railroad bridge over the stream toward Samptown was weakened, and trains were not allowed to run over it, passengers being transferred over it on foot from trains proceeding either way.

The storm was severely felt at Rahway, as the Rahway river overflowed its banks throughout its course through the city, and lumber and other property was swept away by the current. At one time it was feared that the fine railroad bridge of the Pennsylvania road would give way under the immense pressure of water. Reports state that thirteen bridges within the city limits were swept away, also the dam at Milton Lake, and one man named John Wilson, drowned.

The tracks on the Central Railroad from Bayonne to Pamrapo and at Communipaw were submerged on Saturday night, and all trains were slowed up to guard against a washout. East and West-bound traffic on the New York Division of the Pennsylvania road was almost suspended from 5:30 o'clock on Saturday night until 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon owing to the carrying away of the bridge at Holmesburg, and washouts between Trenton and Rahway. All Pennsylvania through trains to Philadelphia were run over the Central Railroad from Elizabeth and the Bound Brook new line to Philadelphia from Sunday morning to Tuesday forenoon. Local trains on the Central line between this city and Communipaw ran on schedule time as usual.

In Bound Brook, at 10 o'clock Saturday night, the water, which was very high already, began to rise suddenly. In a short time it was flowing through Main street, the chief street of the town, and soon reached a depth of from eight to ten feet in the street, with a very rapid current. In the stores the water rose over the show-cases on the counters, and a large amount of valuable goods were ruined. The more cautious merchants had piled their goods from the floors on the counters before closing up, never imagining that the water would do more than wet their floors. At Einstein's woolen mills the water rose over the looms. The Lehigh Valley Railroad runs along the eastern river bank through the town. A quarter of a mile from the depot a bridge and a long stretch of the track were washed away. The damage cannot be repaired for several days, and all the Lehigh Valley trains are running to Easton over the Central Railroad of New Jersey. Right alongside of the Lehigh Valley road, but further from the river, the Central Railroad of New Jersey runs through Bound Brook. The track of this road was three feet under water. In the depot the water was two feet deep. The long platform between the tracks was floated away and lodged in different parts of the town, and the tracks themselves were badly washed in some places. All trains were stopped until Sunday, but were then allowed to pass as usual. The Delaware and Raritan Canal banks gave way in several places and the river and canal became one stream. Extensive breaks are reported in other parts of the canal and the five-mile lock below Bound Brook is reported destroyed.

The damages done to bridges in Union county will not exceed $50,000.

Although there was a slight wash-out alongside the sluice ways at the mills of the New Brooklyn pond, the embankment held out all right and no serious damage was done.

The dam below P. C. Ohl's private pond at Willow Lake, on Cedar Brook, did not go out, as was feared, but it is thought that most of the fish with which the pond was stocked, such as carp and black bass, have escaped, as the flood was over the level of the banks of the pond. It will cost $2,000 to repair damages.

From all parts of the State reports of great damage done by the flood are verified. Providentially there was but slight loss of life. The drowning of one of Rahway's well-known and respected citizens, Mr. John Wilson, who was on one of the bridges across the river when it fell, and Mr. Rossiter, of Paterson, who was overtaken by the flood from a broken dam, while driving along the highway, are the only casualties of the kind we have heard of.

Elizabeth city was the scene of devastation on Saturday. In consequence of the dams breaking along Elizabeth Creek, the lower part of the city was inundated, lumber yards swept away, the fires extinguished in the Gas Company's Works, so that there was no gas-light for many hours, and a great deal of damage done by the flooding of cellars and first floors of dwellings.

Messrs. Harper, Hollingsworths & Darby's loss at Scotch Plains, in destruction of their dam, race-way and damage to material by water is about $1,500.

INCIDENTS.

When the fur mills dam broke at Scotch Plains and the waters came rushing through the main street, Andrew Muir was driving one of Warnock's bakery wagons in the vicinity of Coles' hill. He soon found his wagon floating beneath him, while his horse refused to go further. Hastily cutting loose the harness, he mounted the animal's back and escaped to higher ground, leaving the wagon load of bread floating against the fence along side the road.

The oil cloth works suffered from the rise of waters in that locality. Monday night Warren 2 Engine Co. was solicited to lend their exertions to pump out the water with their engine. They did so and repeated it on Tuesday, with satisfactory results. The objectionable smell from the works were not, however, allayed by their exertions. Wish it had been.

From dates of former freshets in possession of New Brunswick residents, it is ascertained that the last great freshet was on July 17, 1865, and that was said by the "oldest inhabitant" to be the greatest since 1822. The freshet of 1865 was caused by heavy rains at the head waters of the Raritan; only 1.25 inches of rain falling in that city.

All the labors of the New Jersey Game & Fish Protective Society for the past three years in stocking ponds and streams in Union County with Black Bass and other game fish, have come to naught. With the exception of New Brooklyn Pond and one or two others, the dams of ponds stocked have broken away and let the fish out.

The dam across the pond at Washingtonville, from which Messrs Simpson & Co., procured their ice, was carried away by the freshet, and as all communication was cut off to their ice house at that point, in consequence of bridges carried away, they were for a few days supplied with ice for their customers by Messrs. Tier & Co.

When the rush of waters tore out the bridge across Cedar Brook at Broadway, the destruction to the corn field and property of Mr. Isaac Brown, residing near by was extensive. "Uncle Ike," took in the situation philosophically, however, and said it was "all right."

The flood at Rahway was increased by the breaking away of the dam at Milton Lake, two and a half miles above the heart of the city. Enormous timbers came down the stream and tore out the dams, which was constructed of rough rocks and timbers.

Police authorities were very "scarce" about the dangerous localities caused by the freshet in this city, until after all danger was over. This is said in a kindly (!) spirit, but it is a fact.

Among the sufferers along the line of Green Brook in consequence of the freshet was Mayor Randolph, whose hot-house and garden suffered extensively.

Numerous small fish were to be seen in pools of water left standing along the main road from this city to Scotch Plains, after the freshet had subsided.

At least 40 bridges were swept away in Union County. The loss of bridges to Rahway is 13.

The dam at Lambert's Mills, on the stream leading into Rahway River was destroyed.

The loss to the county in bridges to Plainfield [illegible].

WESTFIELD NEWS.

The annual meeting of the town committee to assess the tax on dogs will take place on Monday evening, October 23.

The temperance meeting held on Sunday afternoon in the M. E. church was largely attended. Rev. Warren Hoagland delivered an address.

The regular monthly meeting of Westfield Bucket & Engine Co., No. 1, will occur on Tuesday evening, Oct. 3d, 1882, instead of Monday evening.

William Schoonover is spoken of as a prominent candidate on the Republican side for Assembly in the Third District. Mr. Schoonover is too good a man to get left on election day.

Rev. Warren Hoagland, pastor of the M. E. church, preached at Scotch Plains on Sunday last. Mr. [illegible], a student of Drew Seminary, Madison, N. J., filled the pulpit of the M. E. church.

The Fourteenth anniversary of the Westfield Baptist Sunday School occurred on Sunday, the 24th inst. The exercises consisted of singing by the school. A very able address was delivered by Dr. Patton of New York. The report of the officers show the school to be in a very flourishing condition. The following persons were elected officers for the coming year: Anson F. Grant, Sup't; A. J. Miller, Treasurer; A. F. Grant, Jr., Secretary, and Wm. Gilby, Librarian.

The Westfield Jubilee Singers under the leadership of Uncle Phineas, were conveyed to Unionville by Mr. Joe Clark, on Tuesday evening, where they were advertised to give a concert. There was a good attendance present and at the close of the exercises Uncle Phineas was requested to repeat it again on Wednesday evening, which he did, to a large audience, and gave perfect satisfaction. They have already received an invitation to give one of their concerts in the city of Brooklyn which they expect to do at no distant day.

The heavy rain storm of last Friday and Saturday played sad havoc with the roads and bridges in our township. The mountain road from Carbery corner, known as the burnt hill, was washed so as to make it impassable. Gullies to the depth of several feet were made in the middle of the road. Broad, Elm and Prospect streets in the village were cleared of all the earth that the overseers had put upon them in repairs the past season. The town committee held a meeting on Tuesday evening, the 26th inst., to take action in advising the overseers of the several road districts in the township what to do in the way of repairing the roads, as all of the money voted for repair of roads by the township and the several road districts, had been already expended. The arch bridge at Holmes' blacksmith shop, road district No. 4, was made totally impassable, so that the cross road at that point had to be blockaded. The stone bridge at Locust Grove was partially destroyed. Two wooden bridges on road district No. 12 near Theodore Folsom's, were floated away off their foundations. If it had not been for the wise action of the village improvement committee two years ago in widening and lowering the stream through the centre of the town, the damage to the roads and sidewalks would have been considerably greater than it is. Now is the time to get the stone crusher and set it to work, and thoroughly repair our roads.

MISCELLANY.

Cesspools are a great convenience to property owners, and they no doubt are the cause of a portion at least of malarial diseases often prevalent. In view of this, Mr. J. P. Wolfe, of Dunellen, has obtained from an eminent disinfectant expert, a formula for the preparation to use for the purpose of destroying the odor and evil effects arising therefrom, and will soon be ready to supply the demands of the public in any quantity. PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD OF CHOSEN FREEHOLDERS OF THE COUNTY OF UNION.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J. Sept. 7th, 1882.

The Board met in regular monthly meeting on Thursday, September 7th, 1882, at 2 o'clock P. M.

Present—Director Martine and Freeholders Briant, Clark, Doty, Eller, Hubbard, Husbands, [illegible], Magee, Newberry, Oliver, Runkle, Stover, Thompson, White—15.

Absent—Freeholders Halliday and Smith—2.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The County Collector's monthly statement of unpaid taxes, was presented and read as follows:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union.

GENTLEMEN—

The amount of taxes due the county is the same as reported at your last meeting, namely:

From Rahway	$36,099.26
From Summit	1,000.06
	$37,099.32

The tax levy for the present year will soon be falling due. If it is the desire of the Board that I should send notices or demands on Treasurers or Collectors of the cities and townships of the amount due with the time of payment, I will comply with such a request, otherwise I will as in the past leave each Treasurer and Collector to attend to their own duties. Some insist upon the idea that the State and county must make a demand through the County Collector, though in our mandamus suits (I believe ten in all) it has been repeatedly decided that no demand is required.

All cities and townships are in possession of a duplicate that should show the amount of the tax levy, and the time of payments are fixed by general or charter laws. As it is not by statute made a duty upon me to send these notices or demands, I will not do it unless it is the desire of your Board.

Very Respectfully,
P. SHERIDAN, County Collector.

Sept. 7th, 1882.

On motion of Freeholder Briant, received and ordered on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Final report of the Com. on line bridge between Union and Somerset counties:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union.

GENTLEMEN—

Your Com. on Terrell road bridge on the line between Plainfield and Fanwood, in the county of Union and the county of Somerset, would respectfully report that the same has been completed according to the plans and specifications to the satisfaction of your committee, and a bill for one half of the expense amounting to $263.75, with a warrant properly audited, accompanies this report. Your committee would recommend the payment of the bill, and ask to be discharged. All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. M. STOVER,
WM. H. BRIANT,
J. F. HUSBANDS,
WM. M. OLIVER,
Committee.

Elizabeth, Sept. 7th, 1882.

Freeholder Runkle moved that the report of the committee be received and the recommendation adopted.

Which was carried by a unanimous vote.

From Com. on Franklin Mills bridge.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—

Your Com. appointed with power to construct a new bridge or repair the old one over the Passaic at Franklin Mills, would respectfully report that at a joint meeting of the committee it was decided to expend as little as possible on the present bridge, but sufficient to make it safe until next May, when new Boards will organize and take this bridge into consideration in making their appropriations for the new year.

All of which is respectfully submitted

WM. H. BRIANT,
GEO. W. DOTY,

Old Reminiscences.

Among the excursionists who went from this city to Mauch Chunk Thursday Aug. 1, was Mr. Emory Vail of East 3rd street. Mr. Vail is eighty two years of age. He was born within three miles of Plainfield—just beyond the Short Hills. He became a resident of Plainfield when but two years of age. There was at that time but about a dozen dwellings here. His father built a house in which the family resided for many years, on what is now the corner of Front and Peace streets, where Mr. M. McDonald now resides. In the year 1819—Mr. Vail relates—that he, in company with another man, and the latter's wife, started for the wilds of Crawford county, Pennsylvania, to visit an uncle of his (Mr. Vail's). Their means of conveyance was a one-horse wagon. They left this city in the morning and arrived at Easton the same evening where they remained over night. Their horse having "given out" a blind one was purchased for $16 and the trip resumed. Nearing Mauch Chunk they met a two-horse team loaded with coal en route for Philadelphia coming along the dug-out road about half-way up the side of the Mountain from the Lehigh River. This road was so narrow and crooked that it was found necessary for one of the men to act as a "pilot" i. e., to run ahead to see if any other team was coming towards them, when, if the way was clear the "pilot" would return and lead the horse while the other man would take hold of the hind part of the wagon and "gee-haw" it off to the left hand side of the road to keep the thing from falling down the precipice to the river. By a series of "turnouts" along this dangerous road teams were enabled to pass one another. Just before reaching Mauch Chunk a four-horse team was met loaded with coal for Philadelphia. Mauch Chunk at this time consisted of one solitary log shanty which was used as a boarding house by about forty Irishmen who were employed in building a dam in the river at that point for the purpose of forming a "slack-water" on which coal was to be floated to market. The name Mauch Chunk was at this time only associated with a small creek which empties into the Lehigh river at that point. The "provisions" for the laborers at the dam were "carted" from Philadelphia by teams who returned thither loaded with coal. After stopping over night there the travelers resumed their journey westward, accomplishing the same in ten days. Mr. Vail, in contemplation of his trip to Mauch Chunk on the excursion to that place last week, took peculiar pleasure in recounting the particulars of his tedious and perilous journey in 1819, to that place. He is yet hale and hearty; can walk three miles an hour and "keep it up too." A good growth of auburn hair still adorns his cranium, upon which not a gray one is seen. It might be appropriate to remark in this connection that he has always been a bachelor. He can read without spectacles and bids fair to live many years.

HAT FLIRTATION.

The latest craze is the hat flirtation. It is too utter utter, too intensely intense. The following is the code:

Wearing the hat squarely on the head—I love you madly.

Tipping it over the right ear—My little brother has the measles.

Pulling it over the eyes—You must not recognize me.

On the back of the head—Ta, ta!

Taking it off and rubbing it the wrong way—My heart is bursting.

Leaving it with your uncle—I have been to a church fair.

Throwing it at a policeman—I love your sister.

Holding it in your right hand—Lend me a quarter.

Using it as a fan—Come and see my aunt.

Carrying a brick in it—Your cruelty is killing me.

Kicking it up the stairs—Is the old man around?

Kicking it down the stairs—Where is your mother?

Kicking it across the street—I am engaged.

Hanging it on the right elbow—Will call to-night.

Hanging it on the left elbow—Am sadly left.

Putting it on the ground and sitting on it—I am going away, farewell forever.

Several parties had stopped to look at his patent [illegible] as he exhibited its workings in front of a grocery store in Jersey City, and one of the group finally said:

"Have you been long in this business?"

"No, sir; I assure you that I have seen better days."

"Had ill fortune down, eh?"

"Yes, sir; I've been my palmy days as well as other men."

"It must have been a hard blow."

"It was; it nearly crushed me."

"Beg your pardon, but may I ask if you were a broker or capitalist."

"Neither one, my friend," replied the man, as he wiped a tear from his eye. THE GOVERNOR'S WIFE.

"Sakes alive, Cale Morton! Brought home two people to eat us out of house and home, and you in debt already up to the crown of your head, as a body might say! Well, if ever I heard the like! When you have got the roof off from our own heads, perhaps you'll be happy! We shall live to come to want through your doings! Now, you just mark my words!"

The speaker was a little, thick set woman, with a hard, wrinkled face, thin, tightly shut lips, and two fierce little light-blue eyes that glared with all the sharpness of an angry hawk's glance, first upon the stout, comfortable-looking, white headed farmer, who was shifting uneasily from one foot to the other in front of his own door, and then at the pale, sacred countenance of a delicate woman and child who sat in the wagon from which he had just dismounted.

Such a pleasant looking home it had been to those weary wayfarers before its mistress appeared!

A square, old-fashioned farmhouse, gray with the storms of sixty years or more; but with a broad, flat door stone, and open door overhung with lilac-blossoms—a door that led straight into the neatest of kitchens, were long rows of glistening tins, in a corner cupboard, shone like silver as the evening fire blazed upward from the open hearth.

But Mrs. Morton spoiled it all. Her sour, withered, miserly visage and her sharp, hard voice made the poor woman who had come to seek her charity shudder and grow sick at heart.

"Don't mind us, sir. We will go back and sit beside the road where you took us up," she said faintly, to the farmer. "I am not a beggar, and my child must never be one. Let us go sir. We would both rather starve than stay where we are not welcome."

She reached forward to touch the farmer on the shoulder, but that effort was too much for her wasted strength.

She sank forward and would have fallen under the horses' feet if the farmer, warned by a cry from the little girl, had not turned and caught her in his arms.

"Well, I'm sure!" began Mrs. Morton, spitefully, to the child, whose great blue eyes were fixed upon her with a look of fear and dislike, "Your ma makes quite free for a stranger."

"For shame, Sarah," said her husband, severely. "At least we have enough and to spare for the present, and the future must take care of itself. Folks are not going to perish to death right here at my door when I can prevent it."

"There's the poorhouse for such as her,"

said Mrs. Morton, viciously.

A look from her husband silenced her at last. He bore the fainting woman indoors, and laid her down in the spare room. "On my best bed," Mrs. Morton used to say, indignantly, for many a month thereafter. With his own hands the kind old farmer carried in a plentiful supper and breakfast to the wanderers. And when, after the next morning's meal, the poor woman bad him adieu, and, with grateful tears, prayed that God might bless him, he patted her on the shoulder encouragingly, and slipped a five dollar bill into her hand.

"Take that, my dear, for you and the little one to live, till you get stronger," he said. "Now don't cry over it, my dear, but keep a good heart, and heaven will send you friends as you journey along. Good bye, little one. Will you give an old man a kiss?"

"Yes, I will," said the child, springing into his outstretched arms, and pressing her lips upon the withered cheek; "and when I am a great large woman, I'll pay you back for being so kind to my poor mother. Why, she would have died if you hadn't taken her in last night. And then I should have died, too!"

Tears were in the farmer's eyes as he stood looking after his late guests; but his heart was warm with the consciousness of a good action performed, and a benefit conferred.

"You might as well hang a sign out, and say that we keep a tavern for every straggler that comes along," remarked Mrs. Morton, from the door. "I do wish, Caleb, you'd stop doing so. You won't end till we are both in the poor house, and then you'll be easy!"

"If I am to go to the poor house for helping a starving woman and child, go I must, Sarah," said her husband, quietly.

"And go you will, mark my word," replied Mrs. Morton, in a fury, shutting the house-door with a bang, that made milk-pan and cup and saucer ring and rattle again.

* * * * * * * *

Ten years have passed on. And it began to look as if Mrs. Morton had only been too true as prophet when she foretold ruin for her husband and the almshouse for them both.

In an evil day, Caleb Morton signed a note for a poor and struggling neighbor, who died just as the time of payment drew near.

Nothing was left, excepting a scanty provision for the widow and orphans. Caleb would have starved before claiming that from them, even if he could do so legally.

Their homestead, already mortgaged, must go to pay the debt, and he was ten years older, broken down by hard work, and beaten down just now by his wife's tongue, which never ceased repeating, "Didn't I tell you so?" till his poor heart was fit to break.

"I did wrong. I see it now. I'm sorry for it. But do not blame me so, Sarah," he said, sadly. "God knows I meant to do right, and to do my best for you. And I'll go to the city and see this rich man that holds the note. He is a lawyer, and they've just made him Governor of this State. He don't need the money, and maybe he will agree to some arrangement, so I can pay it off by degrees and not sell our home."

"That's the first sensible word you've said about the business," cried Mrs. Morton.

And she bestirred herself so effectually to get him off at once, by ten o'clock the next morning he was ringing at the door of the beautiful city Mansion in which the new-made governor had just taken up his residence.

He was admitted by a servant, who was rushing out on an errand in hot haste.

The household staff was not yet organized. There was no one in the hall to receive him. He wandered on, wondering at the tall, marble pillars and the floor of tessellated marble till he came to the Gothic library where the Governor was sitting, in company with his beautiful six-month's bride.

The old man glanced at the rich carpet, the velvet and rosewood chairs, the tall vases, the gilded pictures upon the walls, through the half opened door. Then his eyes fell upon a portrait that hung in the place of honor above the fireplace, and he stood still.

A sweet, pale spiritualle face, with waving, silvery hair brushed back from the forehead, and a look of peaceful benediction beaming from the large blue eyes.

"I ought to know her well," mused the old man. "And I know now—it is the poor lady who came to our house, one evening, with the pretty little child. It looks as if all their troubles must be over, if they live in a house like this."

In the library, at the same moment, a pair of beautiful blue eyes were lifted to that portrait, and tears dimmed their light—tears that the lips of a lover-husband soon kissed away.

"If the picture makes you sad, Lucy, it must be moved to one of the upper rooms," said the Governor. "I never wish to see a cloud upon your face again."

"No cloud will ever come there through you, George," replied his young wife. "I am not unhappy when I look at her, and I like to have the picture there, because it is in this room that we shall be oftenest together. I was only thinking how sad it was that she could not have lived to share with us this beautiful home."

"Your mother did not care to live longer, Lucy," said the Governor, after a pause. "She told me so herself, after she had found your Uncle Eustace, and persuaded him to do justice to you before he died. She remained until she saw you my wife, and knew how tenderly I would care for you. Then I think she was really glad to go. Her heart was in your fathers'."

"Yes; and then she suffered so, in that dreadful time after his death, when we had no money and no home," replied his wife, with tears in her voice, though none in her eyes. "You can never imagine how she was humiliated and beaten down into the very dust. One night—oh, how well I remember it—she would certainly have died, if it had not been for a kind old farmer who took us to his house, although his cross wife objected, and actually called my mother a pauper in her anger. Some day when you are not very busy, George, I wish you would go with me to see that kind old man, and thank him in my mother's name."

"Very well, my dear. Now will you go with me to give your orders about the furnishing of the upper rooms?"

They went out into the hall. There stood the farmer, turning his hat about in his hands, and looking like a man dazed.

"Why here is my friend—my mother's friend!" exclaimed the Governor's wife, dropping her husband's arm, and running up to the old man with both hands outstretched to greet him. "Don't you remember me, sir? I am the little girl you sheltered in your pleasant home. If you had not been so good to us, I might have lost my mother then."

"I remember, miss—ma'am," stammered the farmer, turning crimson all over his honest face.

"And did you come to see me? Or my husband?" asked Lucy, with a proud fond glance at the Governor.

"It was him, ma'am—the gentleman that holds the note and the mortgage on our home. It has been foreclosed, and I must lose it now to pay this debt. I wouldn't have dared to come here, ma'am, on such an errand, only it is life and death to me and my wife. We are getting old now, and I haven't saved anything, and I don't know where we could find another home. If more time could be given me, I could pay off the mortgage by degrees. But I cannot do it now. If I am pressed for it, the home must go."

"How came you to sign a note for another man, when your own property was incumbered?" asked the Governor, as his wife drew the papers from the hands of the farmer, and placed them in his his own.

"I suppose I oughtn't to have done it—that's a fact, sir. But, you see, Neighbor Russell and I were boys at school together, and he was a poor struggling man, with a lot of little children. There was only Sarah and me at the old homestead, and I thought we could risk it better than he could. If he had lived he would have paid me back, honest, every cent. But what could be done if the Lord saw fit to take him? It is all unfortunate, but I acted for what I thought was best at the time."

"George, for my mother's sake, you will not let him lose the home that he has risked to help another," said the Governor's wife imploringly.

He smiled, and looked at the portrait, that seemed to follow them with its sweet sad eyes.

"This business is in the hands of my country agent, and I knew nothing of it until now," he observed. "Make your old friend stay and take an early dinner with us, Lucy, and I will settle this affair."

At eight o'clock that evening Caleb Morton reached his farm, an altered and a happy man.

Never had the old place seemed so dear to him as now, and he gazed around the fertile fields, and at the old square gray house, as we only gaze at the things that we love, when they have been nearly lost to us, and then, by a merciful interposition of Providence restored.

His wife met him at the door, eager-faced and sharp of tongue as ever.

"It is the cup of cold water that the Bible speaks of—it is the blessing that follows after the giving," said the old man solemnly, as he finished the story of his day. "The note was destroyed by the Governor's wife, the mortgage is canceled and this is our home once more, free from the least incumbrance of debt. But if I had refused shelter to that poor lady and her child ten years ago, where should we be this night?"

"Where, indeed?" thought Mrs. Morton, silenced for once in her self-approving life.

Now, if you happen to go there, Mrs. Morton will show you with great pride the best room and the best bed—"on which Governor Gerald's wife's mother slept the night she staid with us—she and the pretty little girl, who is now Gov. Gerald's wife."

A regiment with a military band in front should always march by playtunes.

Any kind of cookery in the world, no matter how execrable, is preferable to a family broil.

It was a very bad little boy who said when he first saw lightning, "Pa, I guess hell is leakin'."

"If sawdust advances," says the Whitehall Times, "ballet girls will have to kill the fatted calf."

When he was eating fast and furiously, piling in the food as farmers do hay into the barn on the eve of a thunder storm in June, the head waiter stepped up, and said: "Beg pardon, sir, but there's no train out to-night." "I know it," said the man, with his mouthful, "and that's why I'm hurrying to catch a good night's sleep!"

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

All nature is a vast symbolism, every material fact has sheathed within it a spiritual truth.

Great ideas travel slowly, and for a time noiselessly, as the gods whose feet were shod with wool.

If you intend to do a mean thing, wait till to-morrow. If you are to do a noble thing, do it now.

We judge others according to results, how else? not knowing the process by which results are arrived at.

Our chief want in life is somebody who shall make us do what we can. This is the service of a friend.

Nature is a revelation of God, art, a revelation of man. Indeed, art signifies no more than this, art is power.

Those who, without knowing us enough, think ill of us, do us no wrong; they attack, not us, but the phantom of their imagination.

It is the mark of a low nature when a man regards money as an end, and not a means, and finds his chief delight in gloating over his gains.

By rousing himself, by earnestness, by restraint and control, the wise man may make for himself an island which no flood can overwhelm.

Not the perversities of others, not their sins of commission or omission, but his own mis-deeds and negligence, should a sage take notice of.

The privilege of being a young man is a great privilege, and the privilege of growing up to be an independent man in the middle of life is greater.

We are taught to clothe our minds as we do our bodies, after the fashion in vogue, and it is accounted fantastical, or something worse, not to do so.

Conversation presupposes a common sympathy in the subject, a great equality in the speakers, absence of egotism, a tender criticism of what is spoken.

It is the moment when our resolution seems about to become irrevocable—when the fatal iron gates are about to close upon us—that tests our strength.

Employment, which Galen calls "nature's physician," is so essential to human happiness, that indolence is justly considered as the mother of misery.

Good thoughts not put into action are like good seed thrown into the fire, or like blowing out the flame of a candle to let the smoke of reproach punish, even as the light illuminated.

The sweetest life is to be ever making sacrifices to Christ; the hardest life a man can lead on earth, the most full of misery, is to be always doing his own will and seeking to please himself.

Just as soon as any conviction of truth becomes central and vital, there comes the desire to utter it. Sacrifice is gladness, service is joy, when such an idea becomes a commanding power.

Health is the bed-plate on which the whole mental machinery may rest and work. If this be cracked, or displaced, all the mechanism that stands on it will be jarred and disturbed, and made ineffective.

No manly man will feel anything of shame in looking back to early struggles with adverse circumstances, and no man feels a worthier pride than when he has conquered the obstacles in his progress.

A person who is accustomed to speak with deliberation may sometimes, by a few words spoken at the right moment, overthrow an argument and make far more impression than a multitude of words without thought.

Console yourself, dear man and brother, whatever you may be sure of, be sure at least of this, that you are dreadfully like other people. Human nature has a much greater genius for sameness than for originality.

"Why do you attack me?" said a brilliant glow-worm to a vile little insect, as ugly as it was venomous. "Because you shine so brilliantly." This reply is the explanation of a great many likes and dislikes and rancorous feelings.

Whether perfect happiness would be procured by perfect goodness this world will never afford an opportunity of deciding, but this, at least, may be maintained, that we do not always find visible happiness in proportion to visible virtue.

The greatest loss of time is delay and expectation, which depends upon the future. We let go the present which we have in our power, and look forward to that which depends upon chance, and so relinquish a certainty for an uncertainty.

Such is the power of health that, without its co-operation, every other comfort is torpid and lifeless as the power of vegetation without the sun. And yet this bliss is commonly thrown away in thoughtless negligence, or in foolish experiments on our own strength.

Always endeavor to speak to some purpose. It would be well sometimes to ask ourselves if what we are about to say will impart any valuable information, whether the one addressed will receive any profit, whether it is anything worth saying, or whether there is any object to be gained in speaking. Much useless talk will then be avoided.

Retraction: "Do you mean to call me a liar?" asked one rival railroad man of another railroad man during a dispute on business they had on Austin avenue yesterday. "No, Colonel, I don't mean to call you a liar. On the contrary, I say you are the only man in town who tells the truth all the time, but I'm offering a reward of twenty-five dollars and a chromo to any other man who will say he believes me when I say you never lie," was the response. "Well, I'm glad you took it back," replied the other party as they shook.

A pretentious person said to the leading man of a country village: "How would a lecture by me on Mt. Vesuvius suit the inhabitant of your village?" "Very well, sir; very well, indeed," he answered: "A lecture by you on Mount Vesuvius would suit them a great deal better than a lecture by you in this village, sir."

A person, visiting Chicago for the first time, met a Westerner of the genuine type in the street near a church. The stranger politely asked whose church that was. He replied, in a tone which none but one who has been in the West can fully understand: "Wal, I reckon that church belongs to the Almighty; but a man by the name of Colyer runs it for him!"

A Philadelphian stole a ton of coal that had been dumped on the sidewalk. When the man who owned the coal came home he swept up the dust and two or three lumps left on the sidewalk, toted it into the cellar, and remarked: "I've stood the short-weight swindling of that coal dealer for some years, and haven't complained, but by the Boss that bothered Corberus, this is just a little too much of a shortage. I'm done dealing with him from this time out."

A correspondent asks for information as to the "simplest and quickest way to make a hole for blasting purposes." Catch on a nail with your new pants just as you are going to a social dancing party, and if there won't be blasting enough for the next few minutes, there's no soothing syrup in swear words.

THE QUICK PANTALOONS.

There is no one thing that shows the falling off in American brain, so much as the habit certain young star spangled Americans have of blindly following the fashions in dress. And among all the fashions that are ludicrous there is none that makes a man with brain so tired as the tight pants that are being worn by some of the society ducks. A man who has a leg that is big enough to be seen with the naked eye can indulge in reasonably tight pants, and not make a show of himself, but for a young masher whose leg is about the size of a cistern pole, and the shape of a lath, to encase it in a covering of gaudily colored gun-case material, is too-too. A young man called on a sarcastic girl a few evenings since, his legs done up in the tightest of pants legs, and she looked very sad and her eyes had a far-away look. He asked her what it was that caused her to be troubled. She looked at his large, fiddle-box feet and said she had been wondering how he got his feet through the legs, whether he unscrewed them and took them off, or whether there was a hinge in the ankle so he could straighten them out. At a picnic recently a young man with tight green pants was lying under a tree, when a farmer who had brought some milk to the picnicers took a stick and struck one of the legs real hard. The young man felt hurt and jumped to his feet, demanding an explanation. The farmer said he saw it lying there and thought it was a striped snake. There are many things the small legs and tight pants could be used for, if the slimness is going to remain in fashion for any length of time. If a tip could be arranged to fasten on the foot, and a reel could be strapped on the thigh, and little hoops made along the leg to run a line through, the fashionable young gent could use his leg for fishing tackle. To see a couple of slim legs in the office of a hotel, among fair sized legs, one thinks of a couple of stalks of asparagus, and wonders how a vine would look climbing up the legs. But there is one thing such pants are good for. No ant can crawl up such a pair of trousers, to make life a burden to the wearer. There is always much sympathy expressed to the owner of condensed legs, encased in gun covers. There is a feeling that the owner of them is in danger of having them broken off by a dog running against them, or falling over a wheelbarrow, or something, and the wearers are treated with much tenderness. A young fellow called on a matron recently, and took a seat on a wooden camp chair that happened to be in the reception room. The good lady looked at the suffering caller and said: "Now take a seat in this stuffed chair. I know that hard chair will scrape the veneering off of your pipe stems." Such remarks are uncharitable, and ladies should remember that young men have feelings. The tight pants will go out of fashion this fall, and those suffering legs can be be banked up with bran and cut feed.—Peck's Sun.

DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY.

The Democratic voters of the city of Plainfield are requested to meet in the rooms of the Democratic Association, Front street, Monday evening, Oct. 9th, at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of electing twelve delegates to the County Convention to be held at Elizabeth, Oct. 10th, pursuant to the above official call. By order of the Democratic Executive Committee.

JAMES E. MARTINE, Chairman.
L. F. WADSWORTH, Secretary.

THE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The call for the Union County Democratic Convention, to nominate a candidate for County Clerk, Surrogate and one Coroner, to be supported at the November election, will be found in another column as well as the call for a Primary meeting to select delegates to attend the Convention. Only this issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST is left us prior to the Primary and Convention, to urge upon the Democracy to send delegates to Elizabeth who will unanimously renominate both the present incumbents, Clerk VOSSELLER and Surrogate GERBER, who have both proven themselves fit men to occupy the positions they were elected to five years ago. Indeed we hear of no opposition to their re-nomination, and doubt not but that they will receive the unanimous vote of the Convention as the standard bearers of the Democracy in the coming election. We hoist to our mast head—

FOR COUNTY CLERK,
JAMES S. VOSSELLER.
FOR SURROGATE,
JAMES J. GERBER.

REPUDIATION.

Thousands of Republicans in the State of New York, and notably the Young Republican Club of Brooklyn, 2,800 strong, refuse to support Judge Folger for Governor, because of the censurable means used to procure his nomination.

They say, and very properly, that it is not only indecent, but exceedingly dangerous for this or any other Administration at Washington to run political machines and force through State Conventions its own particular nominees, and therefore, as a just rebuke to Arthur-Conklingism, they repudiate the action at Saratoga, and will either abstain from voting or openly cast their ballots for Mayor Cleveland, the Democratic candidate.

ROUND THE CORNER.

"Julius, hab de Publican party nominated Araby Bey for Congress?"

"What you propound sich a silly question as dat for, Sam?"

"Becase I was told so, Julius."

"Who thumped dat foolish idea on top ob your thick skull?"

"Uncle Remus told me jist now."

"Sam, you an' Uncle Remus am a couple ob woolly headed hippopotamuses. Don't you an' him know dat Araby am a culud pusson, an' hab you not discivered by dis time ob life dat a brack man's got as much show to be nominated for Congress in Jarsey or for any oder good payin' and 'spectable office by the Publican party as I hab to own dat ar Railroad, locomoters, kears and all?"

"I see de pint, Julius, but who did dey nominate anyhow?"

"Why, Mr. Cain, ob Elizabeth.

"Mr. Cain?"

"Yes, sah, Mr. Cain."

"Was it him what killed Abel?"

"Dat is more dan I can possume to answer, but on de honor ob a gemman I assure you, Sam, he will nebber kill ole Massa Ross, of Brunswick, for de solemn reason dat no saplin' am yet growed or cut to knock him ober. No saree! I'se preachin' now, Sam, I is."

"Julius, I b'leve ebery word you say."

It is reported that Queen Victoria will shortly visit the South of France.

* * *

The Dublin police profess to have discovered the murderers of Lord Cavendish, but say it will be impossible to convict them without the aid of an informer.

* * *

What is the matter with the New York Sun scribblers that they have ceased to call Hon. Miles Ross a thief because he voted for the River and Harbor bill? Are they tired already?

* * *

Secretary Folger has written a letter accepting the Republican nomination for Governor of New York, and A. P. Hepburn, who was nominated for Congressman-at-large on the same ticket, has declined.

* * *

Lewis Cochrane, who was put forward by the Democratic opponents of Congressman Harris, in the Fourth New Jersey District, has declined to become an instrument for dividing the party, and has ordered the Hunterdon Democrat to remove his name from the head of its columns.

THAT CONVENTION.

Hon. Alvah A. Clark, Chairman of the late Democratic Convention at Newton, which re-nominated for Congress Hon. Henry S. Harris, publishes a letter this week, in which he states that there will be no re-convening of that Convention as the Republican press has been howling to have done. He says that not a majority of the delegates have asked for the recall. If a majority, within a reasonable period, had requested it, he would have felt obliged to recognize the request. Now won't some Republican scribbler to the New York Sun urge something else to defeat Harris. Perhaps some of his ancestors were witches or something of that sort. Write something, anyhow, you won't do it after the election of Henry S. Harris next November.

UNITY.

The Democrats of the State of New York in their recent Convention at Syracuse acted wisely by placing in nomination the very best of candidates, declaring allegiance to the soundest of political principles, and admitting to representation and fellowship the rival factions of the Metropolis.

That was the proper thing to do, because it ended personal controversies and made the Democratic party what it should ever be, a solid phalanx, ready and eager to move onward to victory.

The good example thus set by the Democracy of New York, ought to be followed by fellow partisans throughout the whole land.

Democratic duty is not to fan the fires of internal discord, but to merge all individual likes and dislikes in a combined and determined effort to re-inaugurate the sovereign rule of integrity, equity and economy.

The people need Democratic unity for the sake of their dearest rights and privileges.

Democrats! Let your rallying cry be: UNION FOR THE PRESERVATION OF LIBERTY!

CITY DEPARTMENT.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - - City Editor.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER IN UNION COUNTY.

COUNCIL meeting next Monday evening.

REPUBLICAN primaries next Tuesday evening.

THE political pot will now boil for a few weeks.

THE Somerset County Fair has been a success thus far.

THE taxes of 1882 in the city of Plainfield are now due and payable.

THE Water Supply question is again being agitated in the Council. Go slow.

THE Grand Jurors from this city are Wm. R. Clarkson, James E. Martine, Seymour Halt and Joseph S. Cotter.

NOTHING of importance transpired by the grand Jury of this county has reached us up to the time of going to press.

As we have before remarked—the next Congressman from the Third District will be a Democrat. His name is Miles Ross.

PLAINFIELD is honored with James E. Martine, Esq., as foreman of the Grand Jury. He is the right man in the right place.

THE Bound Brook Chronicle has temporarily suspended publication—Somerset Messenger. What's the matter, Bod. Drowned out so soon? Hope not.

THE Directors of the Somerset County Bank have declared a dividend of 3 per cent. on the earnings of the last six months.

THE firm of Baybert & Jennings, tinners and sheet iron workers on North Avenue, have dissolved partnership. See notice in adv. column.

THE Republican primaries, to elect delegates to the County and Assembly Conventions, are called for Tuesday of next week, October 10th.

NOW, don't you think we need an Opera House in Plainfield to accommodate the assemblage that will go to see Hazel Kirke next Tuesday evening.

THE Democrats of Plainfield will meet in Primary meeting Monday evening next to elect delegates to attend the County Convention, Tuesday, Oct. 10th.

THERE are more early risers than usual these fine mornings. The cause of it all is, a desire to view the comet which appears in the eastern sky just before daybreak.

THE attention of contractors is directed to the advertisement in another column, calling for estimates for the construction of a new school building in this city.

THE Republicans hold their County Convention on the 12th inst., to nominate candidates for County Clerk and Surrogate, who will be left behind by Voessler and Gerber.

THE Crescent Base Ball Club, of this city, played a match game with the "Lynwoods" of Roselle, at the latter place, last Saturday. The score stood 13 to 11 in favor of the Crescents.

WHITNEY, the Front street merchant, calls attention to his large stock of kid gloves. The ladies always buy their kids there. Courteous clerks and fair prices are specialties with Whitney.

THE voters of North Plainfield Township should not fail to attend the money election to be held Oct. 10th, to vote for the raising of $5,000 to repair roads washed out by the recent freshet.

THE managers of the Children's Home, this city, have secured the services of Rev. Dr. Vincent as the speaker at the anniversary of that organization which occurs the evening of Dec. 7th.

"FEMALE bicyclists wear pants," says an exchange. This may be something new, but we think not. Women have the pants to many a man's sorrow since Eve persuaded Adam to eat the apple.

THOSE having the matter in charge of bringing Oscar Wilde before a Plainfield audience, announce that this lecturer will appear here either Thursday evening, Oct. 19th, or the Tuesday or Thursday following.

THE warrants for the collection of delinquent fire taxes in North Plainfield Township, have been placed in the hands of Constable P. V. Weaver, who is a good man to place such a document with. "There's your man, Pete!"

THERE was a fair attendance at Laing's Hall last Saturday evening, to listen to the remarks of Hon. Gilbert De La Matyr, and other Greenback exponents. We have heard of no converts being made to their party by their arguments.

MAYOR Randolph was one of the guests and speakers at the annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce, given on Tuesday evening last at the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. He responded to the toast—"Municipal Government, and its influence in Trade and Manufactures."

MR. JOHN KEAN, Jr., the Republican nominee for, and aspirant to Congressional honors in the Third District, visited Plainfield last Friday. He "set up the wine to the boys," even if his pants were tight. He didn't say—"I kan't, you know!" when he met them.

SOME miscreant fired the dwelling house of Mr. A. Dunn, in Somerville on Monday night last, while the family were asleep in the house. The smoke awoke Mr. Dunn, who, with hard work, extinguished the flames, which had been kindled under a stairs with kerosene.

IT is intimated that some of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders object to the re-building of the Grove street bridge the present winter. This is not as it should be. Grove street is one of our most popular thoroughfares. The bridge should be erected as soon as possible.

ALTHOUGH an extra edition of last week's CONSTITUTIONALIST was printed, it was speedily exhausted, our report of the great flood of 1882 being correct and as full as our space would admit of. The only way to insure the reception of our paper each week is to become a regular subscriber. Such are always first furnished with a copy.

SEVERAL quail were observed in the trees surrounding the City Hotel, in the heart of the city, on Sunday afternoon last. It was ascertained that the bevy had been frightened by the approach of a dog in the vicinity where they were bred, within the confines of the city's limits. They were not molested and next day were not to be seen.

THE members of "Alert Hose Co. No. 1" are making preparations for attending the firemen's parade at Morristown on Wednesday, Oct. 11th, as guests of Resolute H. & L. Co. No. 1 of that city. The "Alerts" will go to Morristown by rail, and will be accompanied by Voss' celebrated band of Newark. They will take their handsome parade carriage with them.

WORKMEN are actively engaged in the construction of the North Plainfield Public School building. Mr. Isaac Pangborn, who received the contract for the mason work, has a large force of men at work on the premises, with plenty of material at hand to push the work forward to a rapid completion. Mr. S. T. Hollister, of Elizabeth, was awarded the contract for the carpenter work.

EDSALL'S announcement of Fall & Winter opening appears in our columns of this issue. From it we learn that this enterprising house is fully up to the increasing demands the growing trade requires in a flourishing city like Plainfield. They have just opened a new department of Cloaks to which the attention of the public is directed. They will also show this week an entirely new line of Novelties in fine dress and cloak buttons, ranging in price from 75c to $3.25 per dozen. Doubtless they will find ready sale for these higher grades of goods, as it will save our citizens the trouble and expense of going to New York for them.

IN the show window of Sisson's Pharmacy on Front street, is displayed a handsome frame containing imperial photographs of the members of No. 2 Hose Co., of Plainfield. An inscription testifies that this was presented to No. 2 Engine Company by the members of No. 2 Hose. The presentation took place in the engine house last Tuesday evening, Mr. Frank Cook presenting it in a neat speech. Refreshments and speeches from members of both companies followed. The gift is a really handsome one. The frame is one of R. Waldron's artistic designs, while the photos. are taken in Langhorne's well-known good style. He was assisted in his endeavors to render a good likeness by the really good looks of the subjects.

VANDEVENTER'S Hall was filled to overflowing last Wednesday evening to witness the entertainment given by the J. H. Morgan Combination, in aid of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield. The program was well selected and rendered by artists of the Combination, which consisted in part of home talent. Space forbids our making special mention of any of them this week. We may say, however, that the funny sayings and songs of that well-known Dutch delineator, Chas. Collins, were inimitable. He kept the house in a constant roar of laughter. All the artists fulfilled their parts satisfactorily and elicited applause for their efforts. The management are to be congratulated upon securing so fine a combination. The entertainment will be continued this (Thursday) evening.

The Display.

Among the attractive features of the main exhibition building at the Fair grounds last week, was the display of elegant Clothing and goods by John H. French, the Clothier of this city. Somers & Co., grocers, also had a fine display of canned goods in their line. A. Balliman's display of Watches attracted the attention of all passers-by. No finer array of goods were more artistically displayed than the above.

Theo. Wecks displayed some fine harness.

Firemen's Relief Funds.

The following is a statement of the amount of funds in the several Relief Associations of the fire departments of the several cities in this State.

Burlington, $1,300; Bordentown, 400; Cape May, 750; Camden, about 6,000; Carlstadt, 400; Dover, 1,300; East Orange, 3,00; Elizabeth, between 6,000 and 7,00; Fanwood, 800; Gloucester City, 450; Hackensack, 310; Hackettstown, 400; Hoboken, 14,000; Jersey City, between 2,000 and 4,000; Lambertville, 7,000; Long Branch, 7,00; Mt. Holly, 700; Morristown, 1,000; Newark, 30,000; Newton, 1,800; Orange, 7,000; Paterson, 5,700; Passaic, 1,500; Plainfield, 2,000; Phillipsburg, 300; Rahway, 4,300; Rutherford, 1,100; Somerville, 360; Salem, 700; Trenton, about 12,000; Union, 1,200; Westfield, 550; West Hoboken, 300; Washington, 500.

Meteorological Statistics.

We present our usual record, regarding the state of the weather during September, by the kindness of F. V. Spader, Esq., as follows:

Maximum temperature (19th) 85 degrees. Minimum temperature (29th) 48 degrees. Greatest daily range, (20th), 30 degrees. Least daily range, (22nd), 2 degrees. Range for the month 37 degrees.

Rain fell on fourteen days (1st, 4th, 9th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 26th, 28th and 29th) to the amount of 15.23 inches, which is unprecedented in my records of twenty-one years.

There were seven wholly clear days in the month.

The month was cool, the thermometer only registering 80 degrees and above on seven days.

The month will long be remembered for its excessive rain-fall and its violent equinoctial storm and resulting great freshet, probably the greatest this City has ever seen.

There was a heavy rain-fall on the 11th and 12th of 2.80 inches. On the 20th to 23rd inclusive, there was a rain-fall of 11.84 inches, distributed as follows: On the 20th, 0.68 inches; on the 21st, 0.61 inches; on the 22d, 4.12 inches; on the 23d, 6.43 inches. This quantity fell in about thirty-seven hours of actual rain, and is probably unprecedented.

What a contrast between September, 1881 and September, 1882! In the last week of September, 1881, the maximum thermometer registered 98 deg., and in the last week of September, 1882, the same instrument registered 58 deg. In 1881 there was drought and every thing burnt up, and in 1882 every thing is green and the ground covered with water.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

A meeting of the ladies was held on last Monday afternoon and a Ladies' Auxiliary organized with the following officers: Pres.—Mrs. Milliken; Vice Pres.—Mrs. Burgess; Secretary—Miss McGee; Treasurer—Miss Yates. Sixty-five ladies joined the auxiliary and are at work to secure other members. The constitution will be published soon. Mr. C. H. Yatman, of Newark addressed the meeting.

Hazel Kirke.

The many citizens who attended the performance of "Hazel Kirke" in Vandeventer Hall a few months since, rendered by the Madison Square Theatre Company, of N. Y., and who passed such high recommendation thereon, will no doubt be pleased to learn that this Company with talented artists, will again appear in the same Hall on Tuesday evening, Oct. 10th, to re-produce this popular play. Reserved seats for this entertainment may be procured at Dunham & Miller's Drug Store, next to the Hall.

The Premium List.

We went to the trouble and expense to make a list of the premiums awarded at the late Union and Middlesex Fair for this issue of the Fredonian, when our reporter was stopped by the Managers, who forbade its use until after they had revised it at a meeting of the Directors. We hardly think this is fair to us, and we cannot now promise that it will ever be published, as we do not care to publish important news after it becomes stale through age.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

We, too, as well as our readers are disappointed in not being able to produce the premium list for this issue. The same reason exists with us as that of our neighbor, the Fredonian. It is hard enough to be compelled to compile the list and then publish it free gratis, without waiting until the news is old and stale and our tongues paralyzed with answering questions as to who took this or that premium.

The U. & M. Counties' Fair.

Last year the great drought which prevailed, while it did not seriously interfere with the attendance at the Fair of the U. & M. C. M. A. A., caused a falling off in the exhibit line as far as farm products went. This year, however, another element, water, seriously interfered with all the arrangements made by the managers of the Fair, causing not a failure, but a disappointment in its success financially. Owing to the difficulty of approach to the Fair grounds by reason of the numerous bridges swept away in the two counties by the flood the few days previous to its opening, there was not the exhibition of articles that should have been, many parties being unable to bring their goods to the grounds in time. There was every indication of the Fair proving a grand success previous to the rain storm, which has made for itself a place in the history of this State. In every class of the Speed trials the entries were filled, which while it brought in a sum of money nearly sufficient to pay all premiums in that department, gave proof that the trotting feature of the Fair was going to be something unprecedented in the history of the same. But the bad state of weather prevailing at the opening, and continuing for the first three days, dissipated to the managers' minds at once, any thought of a financial success. Otherwise the Fair proved a very enjoyable occasion. The exhibit in the Ladies' department, although not large, was excellent. The poultry and stock departments were well represented, as was also the mechanical department. The agricultural display was not large. What exhibits there were in all departments were fine. It was discouraging to the officers of the Association to think that after all their labors, the unpropitious state of the weather should so interfere with them. The trotting, however, drew the attention of those in attendance each day. It was the unanimous decision of all that such fine exhibitions of speed were never before witnessed on this track. We have not room for a full resume of each day's trots, but can state that very fast time was made on the track. In the free-for-all trot, Mr. N. T. White's "George M." won the race, his fastest time being 2:26. Last year "Hopeful" made 2:25 in a trial over the same track to beat the record of 2:26. The track on our Fair grounds is acknowledged by horsemen to be one of the finest half-mile in the State. On Friday there was an interesting trial of speed between lady riders for a silver cup, presented by a number of friends. Mrs. Percy C. Ohl won the race and cup against the two Misses Van Zandts.

The attendance on Thursday reached about three or four thousand people, with probably four to five hundred vehicles on the grounds. The numerous stands on the grounds failed to do the business they would have desired. The lunch tent of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, did a very fair business. The meals the ladies set forth were very tempting and reasonable in price. It was the universal comment that the management of the Fair was everything that could have been desired by those in charge of it. Although disheartening to the officers of the Association, and others interested, it is earnestly hoped that they will not let this Fair, which started out so auspiciously, be the last one of the two counties. Let them pick their flints and try it again, and let our farmers and other exhibitors assist them in their laudable endeavors to make it the success it deserves.

The Speed Judges gave universal satisfaction in the discharge of their duties. H. Dayton Crowell, Superintendent and Marshal, also ably fulfilled his part.

WE notice that Easton Dutchman is about our city again. "Dot was good!"

THE Democratic Convention of Somerset county, to nominate a candidate for Surrogate and member of Assembly, will be held in Somerville on Thursday, Oct. 12, at 10 o'clock a. m. The primaries to select delegates to the Convention are called for Saturday, Oct. 14, 1882, at 3 o'clock p. m. The North Plainfield primary will be held at Stout's Hotel on that day and hour.

BUT little business of importance was transacted at the regular Fire Board meeting last Wednesday evening.

Personalia.

Plainfield's package expressman, Augustus Frazee, has returned once more to duty, after a three weeks' pleasure trip through the West. "Gus" looks much refreshed after his trip. The business community of our city are glad to find him once more on hand to take their messages.

Mr. Jasper G. Codington, the Park ave. liveryman, started today for a three weeks visit to the Western country, making the residence of his brother, at Lisbon, Kendall Co., Ill., his principal stopping place. His many friends wish him a pleasant journey, renewed health and a safe return.

Mr. Lewis A. Dunn, the senior of the firm of Dunn Bros., news agents of the Central Railroad line, is rusticating in the South-western country, after his summer's arduous duties. He will be absent a couple of weeks. "Lew's" friends, and they are legion, wish him a pleasant time.

Judge Robert Green and wife celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary on Thursday afternoon, Oct. 5th, at their residence in Elizabeth.

City Editor Demarest has been indisposed and confined to his home the past ten days with severe sickness.

At last our North avenue Peanut merchant, Lorenzo Paoli, has been drawn into the matrimonial net, he having taken unto himself a partner in business and for life in the person of Miss Ellen Callahan, of this city. We extend to "Johnny" our congratulations. May his business and family increase.

R. H. Leatham has returned to his home in this city after a two months visit to Montreal.

Rev. Father Calhoun is officiating at St. Mary's Church, during the vacation of its regular pastor, Rev. Father De Burgh.

The many friends of Dr. T. H. Tomlinson welcomed himself and wife home from their trip to the Rocky Mountains on Monday last. The Dr. returns much refreshed and invigorated from his trip.

Ex-City Judge Suydam has once more assumed office cares, after his illness and accident during convalescence. He yet carries his arm in a sling, however.

A host of friends sympathize with Rev. Mr. Raymond and wife in the loss of their first born—a fifteen month's old infant.

After nearly two years absence in San Domingo, ex-Councilman Lithgow has returned to this city for a visit of some weeks, when he will return to the above country, where he has large interests in the sugar growing business.

Opening Services.

The handsome and commodious little "All Saints Episcopal Church," of Scotch Plains, will have open service on Sunday next, morning and evening, 10:30, a. m., and 3:30 p. m. Bishop Scarborough will be present and participate in the morning service. The church will not be dedicated on that day.

New Brunswick's Firemen.

At the biennial parade of the New Brunswick Fire Department on Tuesday last, there was 500 men in line with polished engines, glittering hose carriages, and a multitude of brass bands. The city was crowded with over 5,000 visitors. Business was suspended, and the public schools were closed. Red shirted and helmeted firemen filled the streets. The procession formed at 2 o'clock in a large square in the heart of the city, and fully 15,000 persons gathered along the line of march, which was four miles long. The houses were decorated. Gov. Ludlow's house was especially noticeable. He stood part of the time on the porch, and waved his hat in response to the cheers of the passing firemen. There were six engine companies, seven hose companies and a hook and ladder truck, besides the Reliance Steam Engine Company No. 2 of Wilmington, Del., whose men wore green helmets and blue frock coats. Every engine company had a brass band. The parade was reviewed from the steps of the Opera House by the Governor, Mayor Strong, and the twelve Common Councilmen. Along the line of march lassies from the country threw kisses and bouquets to the firemen. The Delaware delegation received a large proportion. Banquets were given by the various companies.

A Mysterious Stranger.

The inhabitants of Mount Pleasant, N. J., are much exercised over the appearance of a lady whose actions have been so singular as to lead many to believe that she is an escaped lunatic from some asylum. Mr. Abraham Lowry was attracted last Thursday by signs of cooking issuing from the vacant club house near Aiken's Pond. He entered and found a woman about twenty-five years of age, and very neatly dressed, frying potatoes. When he spoke to her she did not answer. Subsequently he saw her walking round the pond wringing her hands and calling out that she had lost her sister. She was taken to the house of Mr. Ericson. There she has remained ever since moaning for her sister and absolutely refusing to partake of any food. In the course of some of her wandering she was understood to say that her name was Mary Masters. She is rapidly sinking from inanition. When she was found $13 and a gold wedding ring were found in her possession and her clothing was excellent.

The police of New York and Philadelphia have been communicated with upon the subject. A few months ago two sisters were bathing at Spring Lake. One was drowned. It is surmised that the mysterious stranger is the surviving sister and that the fatal accident produced insanity. Efforts to trace the family are being made, but there is every reason to believe that the wanderer will be dead before any clew to her indentity is discovered.

County Courts.

The October term of the Union County Courts opened at Elizabeth on Tuesday last. In consequence of the absence of Judge Van Syckle, who was attending the funeral of a daughter, the Court was formally opened by Judge Depue, who will preside this week. Judges McCormack, Harper and Hyer sat beside him. After the Court had been duly cried by ex-Chief Keron, the Grand Jury was brought in, and was found to be composed as follows:

GRAND JURY.

James E. Martine, Plainfield, foreman; John D. Franklin, Daniel Wolfskiel, Albert Van Schilger, Jonas E. Marsh, Wm. M. Oliver, Edward Ives, John Voorhees, John Egan, John M. Tufts, Sr., Wm. E. Clark, Moses H. Acken, H. Dayton Crowell, Wm. R. Clarkson, Seymour Halt, Jos. S. Cotter, Joseph A. Patterson, Sr., Addison S. Clark, S. L. R. Miller, Milton O. Lowden, John Ganewick, David Morrissey, Ziba H. Bickley, D. Hobart Sayre.

Three of the above—Albert Van Schilger, Edward Ives and John M. Tufts, Sr., did not respond to their names. Mr. Tufts was excused, being over the age specified by law; but the Court said the others would be required to present a reasonable excuse some time during the term.

After the Grand Jury had been sworn, and Donald McVicker and Joston Marsh chosen to attend them, Judge Depue said:

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, I came this morning at the request of Judge Van Syckel to open the Court of this county. I am not informed with respect to the criminal business upon which it will be your duty to act. All the information I have is conveyed by the Prosecutor. With the exception of the homicide cases growing out of the riot at Elizabethport, and a single case of embezzlement by an official, there are no cases of unusual importance.

With regard to the nature of the duty you are to perform, it is not necessary to make extended mention. It is all embodied in the oath. You are to present no one through envy, hatred or malice, nor to leave any one unpresented through fear, favor or affection, reward, gain or the hope thereof; excluding every motive except the desire to administer justice. You must bear in mind that your duties are judicial to a large extent. You are to act on evidence, not to try cases, as this is the ultimate province of the petit jury, but you must investigate so far as to ascertain probable grounds of guilt sufficient to justify you in presenting the accused before the Court. The full and fair performance of that duty is what the law exacts of every citizen who assumes the position of grand juror.

After the charge the grand jury retired, and the Court began to call the list and set down cases for trial. Judge Depue will preside at the Court all this week, or at least till Friday evening.

The printed list this term has 7 cases in the Supreme Court list, 15 in the Circuit Court, 4 in the jury appeal list, and 8 in the justices' appeal list (where there used to be 50 or 100), total 34.

In the jail list there is an unusual number, as follows: Assault and battery, 8; accessory to murder, 4; breaking and stealing, 9; petit larceny, 3; murder, 1; breaking and entering, 1; assault with intent to commit rape, 1; threatening and throwing stones, 1, and grand larceny, 1. Total, 29.

MR. J. P. HOMAN, carriage manufacturer and John Dunning, painter, rejuvenated one of Peter Richert's express trucks, so that it looks as good as new. "Peter" is as proud of the vehicle as he is of honestly and faithfully serving his customers. He can always be depended upon in case of emergency.

Common Council Meeting.

Water Supply brought up and tabled for one week—Expenditures the subject of discussion—Shall the Street Lights go out?—Delinquent Tax Collector Moore explains.

The Common Council met in regular meeting on Monday evening last. Present: Messrs. Rushmore, Livingston, Depew, Kaufman, J. Simpson, Ginna, Newhall, Gardiner and Thompson.

The minutes of last regular and adjourned meetings read and approved.

The following petitions, communications and claims were presented:

By Mr. Livingston, petition of J. G. Cadmus for hackman's license, T. J. Smith for peddler's license, and S. B. Merrill for cartman's license; referred to License Com.

North Plainfield Republicans.

The Republicans of North Plainfield Township met in Primary meeting at the Public School building, Monday evening Oct. 2d, for the purpose of nominating delegates to the Congressional and County Conventions to be held in Somerville on the 6th and 9th of October. There was a good attendance, and Chas. Place, Esq., was made Chairman and Wm. A. Schutt, Secretary of the meeting. The following delegates were elected:

Congressional Convention—Chas. Place, Samuel St. John McCutchen, H. K. Carroll and James K. Arnold.

County Convention—Benjamin F. Brader, E. C. Van Norstrand, W. A. Schutt, Jno. W. Anthony and J. M. Bettman.

Somerset County Courts.

Among the sentences imposed last week by Judge Magie in the Somerset County Courts were the following:

Louis C. Teller. Charge, malicious mischief. The prisoner had been in jail 4 months, and Court suspended sentence.

Wm. Brown (colored). Assault and jail breaking. State Prison, hard labor, 9 months on each, terms concurrent.

Aaron Johnson (better known as "Shine"). Fornication and assault and battery. County jail 6 months on first and 30 days on last—concurrent.

Mary DeWitt, the colored girl who set fire to Mr. VanZandt's building at Blawenburgh. State Prison, hard labor, 10 years.

John and Margaret Burke. Disorderly house. Fine $50 and costs—altogether $120 76.

Charles Cummings. Larceny, breaking jail, and assault with intent to kill J. S. Conover and D. S. Kitchen. On first and second, 2 years each in State Prison; on last, 10 years; terms concurrent.

In the case of the State v. Baker sentence was postponed until the 2d Tuesday in December.

Union County's Damages by the Flood.

A careful review made by the Board of Freeholders of Union County, of the damages done to bridges in this county by the recent flood, shows that the expense of replacing the structures will not be as great as announced by New York and other journals, who seem desirous of making the amount as large as possible. THE CONSTITUTIONALIST last week announced that the damages would amount to about $50,000. It was not anticipated that the loss in Rahway would be so great. The Board have visited all the Townships and cities in the County since the freshet, and after viewing the sites of the destroyed bridges, place the following estimates as necessary to replace them, which, it will be seen, amounts to some $76,000:

Plainfield	$ 8,451 50
Elizabeth	4,475 00
Rahway	44,110 00
Clark	4,150 00
Linden	2,215 00
Union & Springfield	1,300 00
Fanwood	800 00
Westfield	800 00
Summit & New Providence	500 00
Cranford	125 00

The Board of Freeholders deserve the thanks of the County for their prompt action in thus looking after the affairs of its citizens. They meet to-day in regular session to order the construction of the bridges destroyed. The amount necessary to be expended for re-building these bridges, will, under the present law, have to be put in the tax levy of next year. A careful figuring by a member of the Board, shows that even then the extra tax would not exceed three mills on the dollar. It is hoped, however, that as many other counties in the State are as great, if not greater sufferers by the flood, that the Legislature of next Winter will pass a bill to make some general provision whereby the amount necessary can be provided instead of it all being put in the tax levy of next year. Of course the above estimate of damages does not include the destruction of culverts or road beds washed out, the expense of which must be borne by townships and cities.

Obituary.

On Saturday last, Mrs. Susan Taylor, wife of Mr. William Taylor, died at her residence "Edgewood," North Plainfield. Deceased leaves behind her a large circle of acquaintances and mourning friends. She was a charitable, christian lady. Her funeral on Tuesday was largely attended. Services were held in the Crescent Avenue Church, her remains being interred in Greenwood.

Mr. Howard Smock, son of Geo. Smock, died at the residence of his parents near Evona, on Monday night last, after a lingering illness from consumption. This is the third and last son of the family taken away by this dread disease.

Mrs. Anna Gardiner, the aged consort of Mr. James J. Gardiner, of this city, died quite suddenly at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. R. MacDonald, on Monday morning last, the prime cause of death being heart disease. Mrs. Gardiner was highly respected in the community for her Christian character and charitable feelings. She died peacefully, with her family gathered about receiving her last blessing. The funeral services were held on Thursday from the residence of her son-in-law, R. MacDonald on Front street.

Semi-Centennial Celebration.

MESSRS EDITORS:—

The M. E. Church in Plainfield is now just fifty years old and proposes to celebrate the occasion in an appropriate and enjoyable manner. The programme below will give the details. During the fifty years referred to, she has had twenty-eight different pastors, seventeen of whom are now alive. It is expected that most of these—with their wives—will be present and take more or less part in the exercises. All of the services will be of a public nature and the invitation to attend them is as cordial and free as the Gospel of Methodism itself. A special invitation is extended to all those persons who were formerly connected with either the Sunday School or Church, but who at present are connected with other churches either in our city or the adjacent country, to meet with us in the "Love Feast," or "The Family Gathering," or both, and for the time being, renew and enjoy the fellowship of other days.

Very Respectfully,
THOS. H. STOCKTON,
October 3d, 1882. Pastor.

A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

A VOICE FROM THE PRESS.—I take this opportunity to bear testimony to the efficacy of your Hop Bitters. Expecting to find them nauseous and bitter and composed of bad whisky, we were agreeably surprised at their mild taste, just like a cup of tea. A Mrs. Cresswell and a Mrs. Connor, friends, have likewise tried and pronounced them the best medicine they have ever taken for building up strength and toning up the system. I was troubled with costiveness, headache and want of appetite. My ailments are now all gone. I have a yearly contract with a doctor to look after the health of myself and family, but I need him not now. S. GILLILAND, July 25, 1878, People's Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa.

THERE is hardly an adult person living but is sometimes troubled with kidney difficulty, which is the most prolific and dangerous cause of all disease. There is no sort of need to have any form of kidney or urinary trouble if Hop Bitters are taken occasionally.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

MEN WHO PAINT AND POWDER.

There are men in New York who paint and powder. The number is small, but they exist, if the statements of druggists, barbers and dealers in toilet preparations are to be trusted. They are usually young men, not of the highest fashion, and are to be found occasionally in the lobbies of theatres, or speaking English at the French balls. The practice began a few years ago, and has not flourished. The custom of banging the hair among men, on the other hand, grew very rapidly. Capoul, the tenor, gave it impetus, and now in almost any assembly frequented by the well-to-do youths of the city, there are one or more men's heads with banged hair.

A barber, whose place is near Twenty-third street, and who counts many young men about town among his customers, said: "The desire to look beautiful is about as strong in an idle young man as it is in an idle young woman. Many of my customers have no end of trouble in fixing themselves up. I sell a good deal in the way of liquid cosmetics, though nothing like lily white or pearl wash. Young fellows will come here twice a day to have their faces well rubbed with a mixture of bay rum, glycerine and several other fluids which have a smoothing effect on the skin. They come ostensibly to be shaved in the morning, and to have their hair dressed at night, but they really want their faces attended to. They often say, 'Put a little powder on my chin, it looks so black,' but if you put a little powder all over the face and then smooth it down, and make a feint of rubbing it off with a towel, they're sure to come again."

There is quite a house in Fourteenth street devoted entirely, according to its many signs, "to the beautification of the person." The reporter climbed to the second floor, opened a glass door, and found himself in a small reception room. A girl was addressing circulars at a table. Her complexion was decidedly bad. Perhaps, however, she is only a subject. Again, she may be a result.

"What do you wish sir?" she asked.

"Do you do up men's faces?"

"Oh, yes," with a critical look; "I'll call madame." Madame came and the reporter stated his errand. She thought a moment and then said: "I see no reason why a gentleman should not improve his complexion. I have seven regular male customers. Two of them come three times a week and have their nails and hair attended to, besides the face."

"What do you do to the face?"

"First we use a stringent lotion with considerable camphor in it, which takes the natural oil out of the face. Then we remove the blemishes. Moles are taken out with a preparation of iron. Then we build the complexion up with ——," and she went on to give a list of concoctions.

"What kind of men are these, madame?"

"Oh," said she, "they're nice young men; quite nice."

SODA WATER SIGNALS.

"Want to hire a drug clerk?" asked a bright eyed youth, stepping into the office of a prominent apothecary in Muscatine, Iowa.

"Are you a competent man?" inquired the proprietor, rising and closing the door with an air of secrecy.

"Well, I should say yes," replied the youth.

"Had any experience?"

"Three years."

"Where?"

"In Milwaukee."

"Ahem—what would you do for a plain wink at the soda fountain?"

"Dash with sour mash."

"Two short winks and the tongue on the left cheek?"

"Fill the glass half full with Jamaica rum."

"In case a man calls for banana syrup with a doleful look and his hand on his watch pocket?"

"Give him cognac and ginger."

"Three winks and a jerk over the left shoulder with the thumb?"

"Put in Old Tom gin and have the same ready for a friend of the man's who will be in directly."

"What if a man says 'Barabo' and spits to the left?"

"Fill with old crow, dashed with peppermint and tansy."

"The examination is satisfactory. You may come in the morning."

JOHNNY SHEA, Ex-MILLIONAIRE.

Johnny Shea has almost dropped out of mind since he parted with the $15,000,000 that he made on the Comstock and squandered in various places, and the world had almost forgotten him when the San Francisco newspapers a few months ago published with glowing head-lines the fact that he had been arrested as a common drunkard, and dwelt on a fictitious belief that he was reveling in poverty and rags. Since that digging up of this wonderful career nothing has been said of him, and few know where he is. The other day a San Jose, California, gentleman, who was rusticating on Pine Ridge, in the mountain, east of the Eighteen-mile House, took a tramp, and when six miles from camp came to a beautiful little valley nestling in the mountains. The locality is known as Soda Springs, and it is the haunt of a few who know the whereabouts and beauty of the place. The scenery is wild and grand, with an endless succession of boulders and precipices frowning down upon the snug little valley beneath. In this little valley, in a sea of green grass and wild flowers, several rude cottages nestle, and in one of these are the person and family of Johnny Shea.

There are worse things than a scolding wife—but we have forgotten what they are.

PRESS OPINIONS OF MILES ROSS' NOMINATION.

From the Camden Democrat, (Dem.)

The Democrats of the Third District have given Miles Ross a fifth nomination for Congress. Miles is a worker, and will undoubtedly be elected.

From the Warren Journal (Dem.)

Miles Ross has been renominated for Congress, and the New York Sun is disconsolate. When he is reelected, as he will be by 2,300 majority, the Sun can calculate its just measure of influence in New Jersey.

Jamesburg Record, (Ind.)

From the tone of the Republican papers of Middlesex and Monmouth counties Miles Ross, we imagine, will not receive many hard knocks, and it now appears as if his worst enemies are in his own party and centering in Union county. There seems to be a reluctance on the part of Republican leaders to cross swords with Mr. Ross, and this is due, perhaps, to the belief that the Congressional candidate may be traded off for Democratic votes in behalf of candidates for the Assembly. The honest men of both parties should see that no corruption soils the party records this year.

From the Rahway Times, (Rep.)

When the fact that Miles Ross was again a candidate for Congress was openly announced, and his campaign actively begun and vigorously prosecuted, in this county at least, there were expressions of deep seated hostility and the avowed determination to defeat the nomination. Of the conduct of that canvass against him, and the causes of its failure, we are not sufficiently in the confidence of Democratic leaders to know. The failure to defeat the nomination is now a matter of history. Ross goes forth conquering, but whether to conquer or not is a question in which the Democrats themselves have large liberty of decision.

THE GREATEST VOLCANO.

The greatest active volcano in respect of eruption is probably Hecla, on the southwest coast of Iceland, though Vesuvius on the east side of the Bay of Naples may be said to dispute the palm with it. Hecla rises to a height of 5,110 feet above the sea and is surrounded by much higher mountains. It has three peaks and along its side numerous craters, the seats of former eruptions. The crater of its principal peak is a little over one hundred feet in depth. Since A. D. 900, forty-three of its eruptions have been recorded, five of which were simultaneously or nearly so with those of Vesuvius, four with those of Etna and one with both. Vesuvius rises 3,948 feet above the sea level. Its crater is 1,500 feet in diameter and 500 feet deep. The crater of both of these famous volcanoes are far exceeded in dimensions by that of the "mountain of fire" of Sicily, whose crater has been estimated to be four miles in circumference and 800 feet in depth.

SYMPATHY.

Colonel Folsom was reading the paper the other morning at the breakfast table, when he exclaimed in a horrified tone of voice: "What a terrible misfortune!" "What is it—somebody got married?" his wife asked, in an indifferent manner. "No; but a married woman in New York, in a fit of rage, threw a coffee cup at her husband. The cup was shivered into fragments and one of them cutting his jugular artery he died on the spot. The reporter says the grief of the unfortunate woman was dreadful to witness. She was frantic with remorse and made several attempts to put an end to her existence." "Poor creature," said Mrs. Folsom, with a sigh. "I reckon the broken cup must have belonged to her new china set."

Operatic refreshments—high screams.

"All the world's a stage, Sam, and the men and women merely players."

"Yes, massa; but if dat's so where you goin' to get yer audience and orchistry?"

"Say Pomp, you nigger, where you git dat new hat?"

"Why, at de shop, ob course."

"What is de price of such an article as dat?"

"I don't know, nigger—I don't know; de shop keeper wasn't dar."

At Montreal a thief went into the hall of a hotel while the boarders were at supper and gathered up the hats. He was making his way out when a boarder, a little behind time, came in and asked him what he was about.

"Oh," says the thief, "I'm taking the gentlemen's hats around to Leary's to get them smoothed."

"Well," replied the boarder, "take my hat, too."

Certainly, sir," said the accommodating thief, and he vanished.

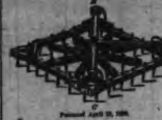
THE PENN HARROW

BEST IN THE WORLD

IT HAS NO EQUAL



Patented April 13, 188[illegible]

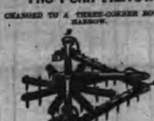
The above cut represents the Penn Harrow [illegible]

THIS HARROW HAS ONLY TO BE USED TO BE APPRECIATED.

See it before purchasing and you will buy no other.

The Penn Harrow

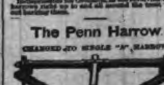
CHANGED TO A THREE-CORNER ROTARY HARROW.



Indispensable for Orchards, as the revolving wheel harrows right up to and all around the trees, without barking them.

The Penn Harrow

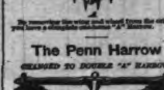
CHANGED TO SINGLE "A" HARROW.



By removing the wing and wheel from the original you have a complete single "A" Harrow.

The Penn Harrow

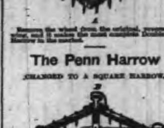
CHANGED TO DOUBLE "A" HARROW.



Remove the wheel from the original, reverse the wing, and it makes the most complete Double "A" Harrow in the market.

The Penn Harrow

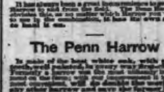
CHANGED TO A SQUARE HARROW.



By removing the wheel from the original you have a Harrow with three points to hook to. By hooking to B or C you can harrow in a furrow, and harrow the bottom and both sides, or over a ridge and harrow the top and both sides, or you can lift either point and have the other points harrowing, something that cannot be done with any other Harrow.

The Penn Harrow

ON ITS SLED.



It has always been a great inconvenience to get the Harrow to and from the field. The Penn Harrow obviates this, as no matter which Harrow you wish to use in the combination, it has its own sled to haul it on.

The Penn Harrow

Is made of the best white oak, with steel teeth, well painted, in every way first-class. [illegible] SEND AT ONCE AND BE CONVINCED.

POETRY.

AN IDLE YOUNG WOMAN.

A common-place young girl,
A decidedly-rare young girl,
Stay at home night
Do what is right,
Help-her-old-mother young girl.

A hard-to-find young girl,
A matter-of-fact young girl,
An extra poetical,
Anti æsthetical,
Care-nothing-for-novels young girl.

A minus-her-bangs young girl,
A show-all-of-her-brains young girl,
With an unpowdered face,
One that don't lace,
A dress-for-her-health young girl.

An up-in-the-morning young girl,
A help-in-the-wash young girl,
One that can rub,
Not afraid of the tub,
And a roll-up-her-sleeves young girl.

A quiet-and-modest young girl,
A sweet-and-pure young girl,
An upright, ambitious,
Lovely, delicious,
A pride-of-the-home young girl.

A remarkably-scarce young girl,
A very-much-wanted young girl,
A truly-American,
Too utter paragon,
The-kind-that-I-like young girl.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A FRENCH DETECTIVE'S EXPLOIT.

Even as the great clown, Grimaldi, was the prince and father of his imitators, so was the great Parisian detective, Vidocq, the prince of detectives.

The phenomenal alacrity which he exhibited in penetrating the motives and methods of crimes, and in unearthing criminals, has never been equaled.

In boyhood a gamin of the docks, he became a dialect performer in the concert halls of Paris, and gained a livelihood in a hundred different grades of employment before he turned his attention [illegible] detection of crime.

At the time of his greatest fame as a detective one Moirellet exercised the duplex functions of sexton and chanter of the fashionable church of Livry in the suburbs of Paris.

He was a shrewd and, to all seeming, a very pious man.

When those northern pillagers, the Cossacks, were expected in Paris, the people of the city and suburbs bethought themselves to conceal their most valuable effects.

The curate of Livry was anxious to remove the church plate and his own to a place of safety, and, being an embecile old man, intrusted his valuables to Moirellet to be secreted.

Mr. Senart, a friend of the cure and a jeweler of Paris, becoming advised of the cure's action, also intrusted one hundred thousands crown's value of precious stones to Moirellet, that they might be buried secretly and securely in the forest of Bondy.

A fortnight later Moirellet appeared before the cure, pale and distracted, to annouce that the Cossacks had certainly passed through the wood and dug up the precious deposit.

So good was the man's reputation, so sorrowful his protestations, and so honest the method of his tale, that the old cure believed it at once; but M. Senart, called to his counting-room Vidocq.

"What kind of a man is this Moirellet?" asked the detective.

"He enjoys a great reputation in all the neighborhood as a man of great piety, sagacity and prudence."

"Is he married?"

"Yes."

"Wife handsome—dressy?"

"She is very pretty and is very fond of dress."

"A native of Paris?"

"She was born and dwelt in her maidenhood in the suburb of Andrea."

"Good. Moirellet shall be called aside from the church to-morrow morning and quietly conveyed to prison. I will at once set forth to Andrea and learn what I can of his wife's family and her early life."

"But there is absolutely no proof warranting the arrest of Moirellet!"

"It is my business to find proof."

* * * * * * *

The next morning Moirellet was quietly conveyed to prison.

An hour later, a dashing and handsome young man, clad in a semi-naval costume, knocked at the door of Moirellet's residence.

His fair wife answered the summons.

"Marie!—and how goes it with my little schoolmate, Marie of Andrea?" exclaimed the young man, grasping her hand impetuously.

"Pardon me, sir, but you have escaped my recollection."

"You do not recognize me? But, tell me, surely you are Marie Gabrielle, the grocer's daughter, who dwelt in childhood at Andrea?"

"I am, sir."

"Then you are the Marie I played with—and you do not recognize me? Fie, Marie! ha! ha! ha! And do you dwell here—are you married?"

"Ay, sir."

"And to a great and good man, too, I warrant, if your beautiful face and womanly graces have met their due!"

"A good man, truly, sir—but if you will be pleased to enter and make yourself known to me, we may converse more intelligibly."

The fair hostess soon after entered the cosy parlor of her home bearing a silver bottle-tray, and pouring forth a glass of wine to the young man, said:

"And now, sir, kindly inform me what my old schoolmate's name is?"

"Ha! ha! and you don't know me, Marie? You know we men love to quiz the ladies? Look well into my face, my eyes. I am one who not only played with you, Marie, in those dear golden days of the past, but one who felt for you the tenderest regard. Can it be possible you cannot recall me?"

"I look at you well, sir, and think over all my young schoolmates, and yet I cannot name you. Keep me not in agony of ignorance—who are you?"

"A midshipman in the navy. Is that not a hint?" returned the young man, holding his glass for more wine.

"It is no hint that I can fathom," returned the lady, refilling his glass.

"Ah, but I have told you wrong—I am a lieutenant in the navy," said the young man draining the goblet.

"But your name—your name?" demanded the lady, impatiently, again filling the empty glass.

"All I have spoken is wrong, Marie," quoth the young man, appearing the least bit intoxicated. "Behold in me the captain of the battle ship Havre—Pere Molliere."

The woman's face reddened, and her eyes flashed angrily, as she sprang forward and caught away the empty glass from the young man's hand.

"Why, Marie," he gasped, in astonishment, "do you think I have lied to you, that I am not Pere Molliere?"

"It is not that," returned his excited hostess, shrewdly, "but that, if you should drink another draught of my wine, I fear that you would turn out to be the commodore of the fleet; and that finally, at the last drinking, you would make me believe you were the lord high admiral of all the seas."

And she pointed suggestively toward the door.

"Marie Gabrielle," said the unwelcome guest, in tones of authority, and raising impressively to his feet, "it had been well for you had you long since shown the true Pere Molliere the door. He who was your schoolmate, who ran from home, joined the navy, deserted after robbing several of his comrades, who, to cap a life of crime, at length came to Paris, donned the robes of sanctity to cover his serpentile trail of misdeeds past—who has been false to everything save his boyhood's love; who secretly induced you to leave Andrea, to wed you, who is at this moment in prison for appropriating the jewels of M. Senart and the cure of Livry; and who has confessed that you are his accomplice. Tell me, Marie Gabrielle, where are those stolen valuables hidden, or you are my prisoner! I am Vidocq."

The glass dropped from the woman's hand and, uttering a piercing shriek, she fell fainting upon the floor.

Soon afterward a squad of detectives reached the home, but without avail, and the woman declaring her innocence, and the ignorance of the missing valuables, was conveyed to prison.

* * * * * * *

That afternoon Moirellet was stripped and put to the "pump," that a confession might be extorted from him.

The "pump" was a water-tight cell in the yard of the prison into which a stream of water constantly flowed, which could only be discharged through the pump.

The only means by which the unfortunate inmate could prevent drowning was by working incessantly at the pump.

For three hours Moirellet endured the enforced labor, but when at length the water was turned off, and he was removed fom the cell in an exhausted state, he still protested his entire innocence, and averred that he was not Pere Molliere.

That night, a coarsely dressed German youth, vulgarly inebriated, was thrust into the apartment of the prison in which Moirellet was confined—much to Moirellet's disgust.

The German, however, dropped in one corner of the cell and slept soundly all night, only at time muttering as if in his dreams such sentences as: "Vot I care no how." "I god dot gold sure." "Vot could dey prove?" "Schmidt, shake hands mit myself—you vas all right."

In the morning Moirellet gave the turnkey a piece of silver and requested he be furnished a veal cutlet for breakfast "done well brown."

"Und gif me also a preakfast of veal cutlet done vell Schmidt," said the German, also giving the money.

"What do you mean by a veal cutlet done well, Schmidt?" demanded the amused turkey.

"Vas dot not right? Dis shentleman he asked for a veal cutlet vell done Brown, und I asked for one vell done Schmidt? Vas you not half gif dot name, ven you sends de urder?"

Moirellet and the turkey laughed at the German's stupidity, but soon after, when the prisoners were eating their food alone, the German said:

"You laugh at me—but I vas dot man vat should laughed. Dond dink I vas a fool pecause I vas Dutch. You was a shentleman, und I vas a tief. I robe a Brussian officer of all his money. I got it. I go—hush!—dis very night, get it—go quick avay from Vrance."

"How do you mean?" asked Moirellet, for the first time looking toward the door without disdain.

"Hush! I vos a tief, I dole you. I knows all de tiefs—all der brisons—look here!"

And the Dutchman with a sly wink removed a neatly hidden slide in the sole of his heavy shoe, disclosing three ingeniously wrought skeleton keys and a small vial.

And do you mean, Schmidt, to break prison?"

"You shall see. I git my gold safe—I git safe out of Vrance. Dey vould not catch me now, but I vas trunk."

"Then if you will aid me, away with you. I know of a vast treasure buried in the Forest of Bondy. A third of it shall be yours."

At midnight the German began work. Opening the cell door with one of his keys he peered forth into the dimly-lighted corridor.

A turnkey was sitting near the door in a doze.

Saturating a handkerchief with the fluid from the vial, he soon had rendered that functionary insensible to noise.

Taking the keys that hung at his belt, he opened the door leading to the main hallway of the prison.

Passing swiftly to the prison's front door, he opened it.

Waiting and listening until the gendarme had passed upon his beat, the two men suddenly darted from the prison, crossed the dark street and escaped.

The German led the way through roundabout streets to the suburbs of Paris, and ere daybreak they had arrived in the Forest of Bondy.

It was a dark night, but Moirellet readily found the spot where the treasure was buried, using sharpened sticks, the men soon unearthed the two large tin boxes containing it.

As they did so, a rustling in the forest leaves caused them to look up.

A score of gendarmes, with swords drawn, stood in a circle about them, flashing the flare of their dark lanterns in their faces.

"Pierre Molliere, alias Moirellet, you are my prisoner," said the German, placing his hand upon Moirellet's shoulder.

"And you are—"

"Vidocq."

"My God!" cried the terrified culprit, "who would have thought it—you looked so clownish." The prisoner was sentenced to six years' close confinement, Vidocq was overloaded with compliments by M. Senart and his cure, who presented him with 5,000 francs for having so deftly recovered their lost treasures.

Colonel Folsom was reading the morning paper yesterday at the breakfast table, when he exclaimed in a horrified tone of voice: "What a terrible misfortune!" "What is it—somebody got married?" his wife asked, in an indifferent manner. "No, but a married woman in New York, in a fit of rage threw a coffee cup at her husband. The cup was shivered into fragments and one of them cutting his jugular artery he died on the spot. The great grief of the unfortunate woman was dreadful to witness. She was frantic with remorse and made several attempts to put an end to her existence." "Poor creature," said Mrs. Folsom, with a sigh; "I reckon the broken cup must have belonged to her new china set."

A DARING RIDE.

The following story, told by a cattle-raiser of Oregon, would seem unworthy of belief were it not that ranchmen are so often notoriously reckless of life and fond of courting danger for the reputation to be gained. A year or so since there was "rodeo" out on Lost River, Lake county. Ranchman had gathered for circuit of thirty miles to claim and brand their young cattle, and when a cordon of men had surrounded a large band, among which was a Spanish bull, a dispute arose about a "mallet head," or calf that had escaped the Spring branding; the discussion grew warm, none of the stock owners being able to set up a valid claim or establish any undoubted title. At last, in a spirit of bravado, a rancher proposed who ever would ride the bull without saddle or halter should be the declared owner of the calf. There was a yell of approval, but not a general stampede of volunteers, for Taurus was in an ill humor, and his foaming mouth and bloodshot eyes gave token that whoever rode him would have a ride as wild as Mazeppa's, and one that would not end so well.

At last a "vaquero" named Frick accepted the challenge, and the bull was immediately lassoed and held by a lariat around the horn and foot. Dismounting his horse the vaquero fastened his long roweled spurs securely, tied a handkerchief around his head, approaching the infuriated animal, and grasping the tail in his hands, sprang lightly on, setting the spurs securely in his flanks, as he settled securely in his seat. The lariats were slackened; the bull gave a roar of rage and terror and flung his head to the ground; but the rider had his back to the horns and a firm grip on the tail and kept his seat. Another roar that shook the ground, a wild plunge and the now maddened bull shot out across the sage plain with lightning speed, his plucky rider twisting his tail that to him was a sheet-anchor until the bellowings were lost in the distance. For over a mile and a half the race continued amid the excited cheers of the vaquero's comrads. Occasionally the bull gave a desperate plunge through a heavy clump of sage in the attempt to rid himself of his tormentor, but the long rowels only clung more firmly to his flanks. Sometimes the rider and animal were hidden by undulations in the ground and bets were even made that Frick would be thrown and gored; but at last the foaming bull exhausted by sheer fright, fell in a mustard hole, and the plucky vaquero, stepping lightly off, returned to claim the prize, which was unanimously awarded.

MY ANSWER IS "YES."

The following little romance is being told this season on the piazzas of the popular Seashore House at Old Orchard Beach. It may and may not be true, but it is worth the telling, at all events. The alleged hero is rather a royal-looking fellow, who, a year or two since, was a Harvard senior; his presence at the beach recalls the gossip. It seems that during his last vacation, in the delightfully unconventional way in which acquaintances are made at watering places, he formed an intimacy with a fascinating pair of amethyst eyes possessed by an exceptionally charming young person. Toward the end of the summer matters came to a crisis. At the midnight intermission of a grand hop, the Harvard senior pressed his claims and asked for answer. The evasive maiden told him she "would like an ice," and would think the matter over while he was getting one. On his reappearance she passed him a glove, saying that he had dropped it while leading the German. He protested that he didn't want a glove; he wanted an answer. She returned with seeming cruelty that he had his answer. No wonder our hero from the classic shades was discomforted; but he endured through what he regarded as his defeat, though by no means with patient resignation. To the middle of the college year he strove in vain to bury his wounded feelings beneath unlimited installments of Greek and Sanskrit. About that time a dainty missive came to him, enclosing an invitation to the nuptials of the seaside beauty. It can hardly be defined as an exhilirating thought which led him to bring forth from the receptacle, wherein it had been despairingly cast, the memorable glove. It was wrinkled and faded and stained; it called up experiences sweet at first but bitter in the sequel. While examining it a crumpled little card, which he had not noticed before, fell out upon the floor. On it were written these words: 'My answer is yes.'

THE MAN, THE HORSE AND THE DOG.

A man was trying to tell his friend how a dog acted when his master mounted a horse to ride away. "He put his foot in the stirrup to mount—"

"The dog did?"

"No, the man, and then it set up a bark—"

"The horse set up a bark?"

"No, the dog, and that made him shy.

"Made the man shy?"

"No, it made the horse shy, and then he raised his hoof—"

"Was it the man or the dog that raised his hoof?"

"Neither one or the other, it was the horse."

"Did you say the horse tried to get into the saddle?"

"Never said nothing of the kind. It was the man."

"Oh, yes, I remember, and then the saddle set up a bark.

"Don't you know anything? The dog set up a—"

"Certainly, the dog set up a saddle; go on."

"What I began to tell you was, as the man was about—"

"You told me that once before. The man was about to mount the bark; what followed then?"

"Who ever heard of mounting a bark?"

"The saddle barked, then, did it?"

"Won't you listen? He threw the man—"

"Dog threw the man?"

"No, the horse, and then he broke and run."

"Broke the saddle?"

"See here, if you interrupt me like that again when I am trying to tell a story, I'll break your head."

This broke up the conference.—Chi. Sat. Night.

A schoolmaster had two pupils, to one of whom he was partial and to the other severe. One morning it happened that these two boys were late and were called up to account for it. "You must have heard the bell, boys; why did you not come?" "Please, sir," said the favorite, "I was dreaming that I was going to Chester and I thought the school bell was the steamboat bell, as I was going on board." "Very well," answered the master glad of any pretext to excuse his favorite. "And now, sir," turning to the other, "what have you to say?" "Please, sir," said the puzzled boy, "I—I—was waiting to see Tom off."

A REMARKABLE SUMMER.

The summer which has just ended has been almost as remarkable as the spring which preceded it. The cold and rain of the vernal season were extraordinary, and gave rise to fears that a summer of extreme heat and dryness would follow. But there has been no serious drought, Long Island probably having suffered more from lack of rain during August than any other part of the country, and there has been nothing like the heat of 1881 in any of the summer months in 1882. The hottest day of the season was July 28th, when the mercury rose to 90½ degrees at the end of a very hot week, but the highest temperature in 1881 was 101 degrees, and there was that year, in all, more than a month of such heat as that of the hot week of last July. Were it a fact that every year brings about so much heat and so much cold, we might expect a hotter September than we had last year. The past summer has been remarkable in that it brought none of the disasters to crops which had been predicted and all the great crops but corn and potatoes have matured in abundance. Unless early frosts occur the potato harvest will be abundant and the corn harvest fair. Prophet De Voe has heard the katydids sing for nearly a month and therefore he predicts the first frost will come in about a week. But, be the frosts early or late, there can be no blight for the brisk trade into which the country is gliding as it passes from summer to autumn.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Thursday, Oct. 12, 4:30 p. m.

O. B. Leonard, of Plainfield, nominated for County Clerk in the Republican County Convention to-day and George Parrott, of Elizabeth, for Surrogate.

The delegates to the Union county convention at Elizabeth on Tuesday last, without a single dissenting voice renominated County Clerk VOSSELLER and Surrogate GERBER for election to the respective offices they now occupy. The compliment was an unusual one and therefore all the more marked, but no other action in justice could have been taken. Both have conducted the duties of their offices in a manner alike satisfactory to all parties, and their re-election by large majorities is as sure to follow as the daily rising of the sun. Dr. CLADEK, the nominee for Coroner, is a young and popular physician of Rahway, who will fill the office with great credit.

OH! OHIO, OH!

On Tuesday last the people of Ohio rose up against the ways of Robeson, Keifer, Hubbell and other Republican rascals, and by their ballots gave an overwhelming Democratic victory. The majority as stated to-day (Thursday) is "30,000 and still increasing." At least fourteen Democratic Congressmen were elected and these, with those to be gained next month in Pennsylvania and New York, will place the next House of Representatives in the hands of the Democratic party and insure honest legislation for the country. The public is disgusted with Republican misrule and a change is coming.

STOP THIEF.

People in New York and Brooklyn are talking about the alleged squandering of an immense sum of public money on the unfinished East River Suspension Bridge.

No doubt the tax-payers' millions have been swallowed up somehow and by somebody under cover of that particular enterprise, without either honest accounting or public benefit.

But it is only a repetition of the old story of official pilfering, so disgracefully associated with the American name.

The assertion has been made that about fifty per cent. of all the funds appropriated and paid for public buildings and other improvements in the United States goes illegally into private pockets.

If a state capitol, city hall, court house, park, reservoir, bridge, or any similar public work is projected and its cost liberally figured upon, long ere completion is reached the amount actually drawn from the tax-payers' treasury, as a rule, foots up double or treble the original estimate.

It is not so in Europe.

Why should our country wear the robber's plume?

We recently noticed that an extensive municipal edifice had been built and completed in Paris at a less cost than first calculated.

Who ever heard of such an incident in the United States?

Where goes the public money?

That's the question.

Possibly some of the shoddy millionaires now rolling in pomp and with diamond sparkling splendor might tell.

We cannot.

But this we do know, that the public good calls for the paying of a premium for honesty and efficiency, and the condign punishment of all thieves, no matter how rich, finely clad and presuming.

If State Prisons are too few, let an adequate supply be forthwith erected and justly populated.

The people have long enough suffered the fate of plucked geese.

To reduce taxation by raising sufficient, but no more revenue than is needed to meet the expenses of a Government economically and legally administered, is Democratic policy and public utility.

The equitable right of all citizens to freely and safely prosecute individual business and industries, unmenaced by greedy monopolists of any name or kind, ought to be enacted and enforced law in every State of the American Union.

The New York Sun having failed in its prediction of Comet annihilation by the greater luminary of day, and the dire consequences which were to afflict the earth, will doubtless live to witness its malignant opposition to Miles Ross as barren of political effect.

An Arthur-Conkling organ in New York city calls the Young Republicans of Brooklyn who openly refuse to support Folger for Governor "suckling statesmen." That is certainly more expressive than elegant, and by no means calculated to sweeten Half-Breed bitterness.

During the early political career of Henry Clay, then a Representative from Kentucky, many of his partisan constituents became angered because of a certain vote he gave in Congress and threatened to withdraw future support from him at the polls. Mr. Clay, with that suavity of manner which characterized him as a public man, begged them "to pick flints and try him again." They did so and had no further cause for complaint. We would suggest to those Democratic constituents of Henry S. Harris who object to a vote he registered as Congressman a like magnanimous course of action. Democrats of the Fourth District! Pick your flints and try Mr. Harris again! We feel assured that you will never regret the deed.

LOCAL ANNEX.

Band of Hope.

The regular monthly meetings of the Band of Hope open on Monday, Oct. 16, commencing at quarter before four o'clock. These meetings will be held in Warren Mission Chapel and it is hoped that all the teachers and members will be present at this, the first meeting after our long vacation.

W. C. T. U. Anniversary.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold its annual meeting for the election of officers on Tuesday, Oct. 17th, at 3 p. m., in the Methodist church. Their anniversary, at which it is expected Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, the Corresponding Secretary of the National Union will be present, will be held at 7.45 p. m., of the same day and at the same place.

Is Any Interest Due?

As instructed by the Council at its last meeting, City Treasurer Van Winkle demanded of the late Township Collector, Mr. Joseph B. Coward, interest on the sum of $765.10 recently paid over by the latter as due the city. Mr. VanWinkle's demand was refused, and as Mr. Coward handed into the Treasury the balance due so soon as requested, it is not entirely clear that any interest is justly owing.

The Greatest of Expositions.

We can recommend no more interesting and instructive an entertainment than a visit to the American Institute Fair on Third avenue and Sixty-third street. All have undoubtedly in the past spent many enjoyable hours at this annual exhibition of the arts, mechanical inventions, products, and manufactures. This year's display surpasses all others. Besides the usual band concerts and Arbuckle's cornet performances, Prof. George W. Morgan on a Jardine organ, gives daily recitals of his wonderful talent and ability.

Thanksgiving in October.

There is no specially convincing reason why the general Thanksgiving festival should always be celebrated in the last week of November, when there are storms and ice and snow that do not prevail in October. The suggestion is made that the time for observance of this anniversary be changed to the third Thursday of October; and it is a strong argument in favor of the change that as the fourth Thursday of November brings Thanksgiving Day within a month of Christmas, and as almost everybody now observes Christmas and New Year's Day, it brings these three festivals within five weeks, and thus crowds the season overmuch. Thanksgiving Day having become a national anniversary by common consent, it rests with the President and the Governors of the States to make the change if they see fit.

Accident at Fanwood.

Quite a serious accident occurred at Fanwood on Sunday afternoon last. Mr. Rice, his wife and a niece, who live near Dunellen, and a gentleman friend, were driving out when their horse became frightened just as they were passing the railroad bridge above the depot. The animal ran to the freight house, overturned the wagon, threw out all of the occupants on the macadamized road, who were more or less seriously injured. Mr. Rice's scalp was entirely torn from his head, and the niece received severe injuries.

Messrs. Grattan and Beck of Plainfield, who saw the occurrence, went to the rescue. The former brought Mr. Rice to the office of Dr. C. M. Field in this city, where he received the surgical treatment necessary and from there was sent to his home. Mr. Beck carried the unconscious niece into the Fanwood depot, and then mounting the horse rode to Scotch Plains for physicians. Neither of the two spoken of above as most seriously injured, are yet considered out of danger.

Off the Bridge.

At about 9:30 o'clock of Thursday evening of last week, a party of five young men of Elizabeth were on their way home from the Somerville fair. They had by walking along the track and catching an occasional ride on passing coal trains, reached this city and were crossing the bridge over Grant avenue when one of their number, John McGann aged about 18 years, stepped over the edge and was precipitated into the street below. His companions climbed down the bank to his assistance and found the unfortunate young man almost insensible and entirely unable to move. The victim was by them carried to the residence of Mr. John Burke in the vicinity, from whence the matron of the Muhlenberg Hospital was notified and a room prepared. Upon being taken to the Hospital, Dr. Long the surgeon on duty administered such treatment as was necessary and the comfort of the patient was looked after. On Monday the young man was removed to his home in Elizabeth, and the surgeons at the Hospital are of the opinion that he will not recover. The principal result of the casualty was a concussion of the spine.

Y. M. C. A. Conference.

A District Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Jersey, was held in this city during Thursday of last week which brought together delegates from the associations of Hudson, Bergen, Essex and Union Counties. President Elkanah Drake of the State Committee, presided over a public meeting in the M. E. Church in the evening, and a session was held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall during the afternoon followed by a collation served by the Ladies' Auxiliary. The Rev. Drs. Yerkes and Ketcham assisted in the exercises, and the Rev. Dr. Lewis delivered an address. President H. B. Munger of the Plainfield association spoke at some length of the work in this city. The Rev. M. Yatman, general secretary of the Newark association, and Mr. E. D. Ingersoll, general secretary of the railroad associations, each spoke of his own particular field of operation. The music furnished was under the direction of Mr. H. Otis Newman, and the Rev. T. H. Stockton adjourned the conference with a benediction.

Firmen's Parade.

Wednesday last "Alert Hose Co. No. 1" of this city, Auguste Saltzman foreman, visited Morristown, N. J., to participate in the firemen's annual parade of that city, as guests of "Resolute H. & L. Co. No. 1" of the Morristown department. The "Alerts" left Plainfield on the 8:01 a. m. train, 30 members strong, accompanied by Chief Vail and Assistant S. A. Davis. Their handsome parade carriage had been sent overland to Morristown the day before under charge of Peter Rickert, our capable truckman. At Newark, the "Alerts" were joined by Voss' celebrated brass band, who were acknowledged the band of all those in the line of parade. Arriving at Morristown, the "Alerts" were taken in charge by the "Resolutes" who know full well how to entertain their friends. First came an excellent lunch in Washington Hall, catered by Morristown's well-known restaurateur, Day. Later in the day, after the parade, the visiting company were entertained at the same place, with a substantial dinner. Here the "Alerts" were welcomed and extended the hospitalities of the city by Mayor Sullivan, who eulogized the firemen in general and especially "Alert." Speeches were also made by members of the Common Council and visiting and home firemen. Of the parade, which occurred in the interval, our limited space allows us only to say that it was a grand success despite the unfavorable state of the weather, the drizzling rain and slushy condition of the streets making it anything but comfortable for the firemen. The "Alerts" were assigned the right of line in the parade, followed by Resolute H. & L. Co. No. 1, Washington steamer, No. 1, the Madison H. & L. Co. No. 1, and Humane steamer No. 2, of Morristown. In the rear appeared a company of young lads, dragging the old "Relief" hand engine the first apparatus of the kind used in the Department. This relic is stored in Washington's headquarters. The streets were lined with spectators, and in over fifty instances, arches and banners were to be seen bearing the inscription—"Welcome Alerts" Chief Harry A. Freeman, and ex-Chief W. A. Halstead were assiduous in their endeavors to make the visiting members welcome, ably assisted by Mr. F. B. DuBois, foreman of "Resolute," whose elegant residence was thrown open and its hospitality extended to his guests. Morristowners never do things by halves with their firemen, and the profuse decoration of private residences and business places evidenced their appreciation of the occasion. The "Resolutes" too, know how to entertain their friends, as was adduced by the fact that "you can't pay anything here" being the universal remark when a Plainfielder desired to pay for anything in the fluid line. A noticeable feature of the occasion was that not an intoxicated fireman was to be seen on the streets. Resolute H. & L. Co. is ably officered and consists of gentlemanly members throughout. Ex-Chiefs Voorhees and Coriell, members of "Alert," appeared in the parade wearing the emblems of their former office, the white hat. Foreman Saltzman, of course, was "presented with tokens of remembrance in the shape of a pug dog by Foreman De Bois and a beautiful watch receiver by ex-Chief Halstead. Long live the "Resolutes."

Where to Depend On.

When the public wants its interests looked after and its desires carried out, it can only depend on the Democrats. Messrs. Depew, Gardner and J. Simpson, the Democratic members of the Council, vote every time against the Water Supply Monopoly.

Democratic County Convention.

The County Democratic Convention convened at Library Hall Elizabeth, on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mr. C. A. Ryan called the meeting to order, assigned delegates their seats, and read the call before a chairman was elected.

Dr. James S. Green was chosen chairman of the Convention without opposition.

Rowland M. Stover of the 3d Assembly district; John Barry of the First, and John Keron of the Second, were elected vice-presidents.

Mr. Charles B. Place and Wm. L. Force were elected secretaries.

Clark township not being represented, Robert A. Russell was elected to fill that place.

The roll was then called. Springfield and New Providence were not represented, but the vacancies were filled.

On motion the chairman of the delegation of each ward and township was empowered to cast the full vote of the wards, etc.

Nominations for County Clerk being in order, Mr. James S. Vosseller was successively named by each ward and township, and he was nominated by acclamation.

Next came the naming of a candidate for Surrogate. James J. Gerber was nominated by acclamation.

Next in order was the nomination of one Coroner. The nominees were George Cahill, Dr. Walter B. Cladek and Wm. H. Briant.

The first ballot stood Cladek, 61; Cahill, 49, and Briant, 5. Mr. Cladek's nomination was made unanimous.

Messrs. Wadsworth, Russell and Clark were appointed a committee to notify the candidates of their nomination and bring them before the Convention.

The names of the County Committee were then called.

The Committee returned with Mr. Gerber only, as Mr. Vosseller was home sick. Mr. Gerber was received with applause. He extended his thanks to the Convention, made a brief retrospective address, and spoke a few words in honor of Mr. Vosseller.

You shouldn't pattern after a Clam. They open their shells, take their food, but the moment anything new appears, they shut up, and will have nothing to do with it. Now, what's the use of being a CLAM? You are suffering with Malaria or Chills and Fever, "Titsworth's Sure Cure for Malaria," may be to you a new idea—within the hard shells of prejudice you say—"I know that nothing seems to help me, I've almost made a Quinine mine of myself, without avail—still-ill—shake!"

Of course you will. If you will be a Clam! Now, don't be a Clam! Give us a chance to prove to you that "Titsworth's Sure Cure" will positively cure you of Malaria! 40 drops will arrest the disease in 12 hours. Day is not more certain to follow night, than a complete cure is to follow the taking of this Remedy. Don't be a Clam!

THE collection of delinquent taxes is being pushed most persistently by Geo. W. Moore, the officer appointed by the Council for that purpose. The property of a number of those who are delinquent has been levied upon, and will be sold unless the indebtedness is at once liquidated.

THE Cornell Era, the organ of Ithaca's celebrated college, opens its fifteenth year with Mr. F. Willett Runyon of this city as one of its editors. THE heelers for Young Johnny Kean are at their wit's end to create a howling boom for their candidate. ON monday evening a number of talented vocalists among our German citizens, met, organized a Maener Chor and elected the following officers: President—Chas Giese, Vice President—Chris Stekle, Secretary—A. Gunther; Treasurer—Chas. Greader; Leader—Prof. Schmidt. It is the intention of the society to meet once a week for practice and social intercourse.

HAD the residents of Grove street near the city line half the gumption that is natural, they would have before this erected a foot-bridge across Green Brook at that thoroughfare. A substantial structure with side-rails could be built at but a small expense to each individual, and thus overcome the present necessity of taking a long circuitous route to reach the city.

WE publish the following from the Elizabeth Journal at the risk of inciting a general exodus of young ladies from this city:

> There have been so many weddings thus far this season, with so many others already announced to take place, that a minister suggests that those desiring his services must give him notice at once, as he has engagements for a long time to come. He has, on account of the number, found it necessary to get a new calendar, and even that is already pretty well marked up.

HAZEL KIRKE, rendered by one of the many judiciously selected traveling companies under the management of Daniel Frohman of the Madison Square Theatre, was favored with a full house at Vandeventer Hall on Tuesday evening. Considering the contracted limits of the stage, and the entire absence of necessary accessories, the performance was completely up to the high standard that is universally reached by the manager referred to.

THE first number of a magazine devoted to the progress of bicycling and the interests of its devotees, reaches us in the shape of a monthly constructed after the style of The Century and appropriately entitled The Wheelman. Its contents are varied and interesting, its illustrations artistic, its typography excellent, and as a whole it undoubtedly fulfills its mission. Subscribers, or those desiring a specimen copy, should address the publisher at No., 608 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

Royal Arcanum.

A lodge of this rising order was organized in this city on Wednesday evening by the selection of the following officers: Regent, W. S. Lyon, Jr.; Vice Regent, D. E. Titsworth; Orator, S. C. Baker; Past Regent, A. E. Parkhurst; Secretary, E. E. Anthony; Collector, Joseph G. Miller; Treasurer, Wm. A. Wheeler, Jr.; Chaplain, Rev. J. Logan Murphy; Guide, I. C. Yawger; Warden, W. S. Lowry; Sentry, Chas. C. Moore; Medical Examiner, G. W. Endicott, M. D; Trustees, J. Hallock Drake, John H. Christalan, and Albertus Swaim.

Is it on Account of Prejudice?

It is an open question, subject to but one opinion from the just and unbiased, whether it is proper or equitable for the officer appointed to collect past due taxes to select a certain few delinquents upon whose personal property to levy and to advertise for sale. It is stated that certain Councilmen, the only members of the Committee on Laws and Ordinances in the city, chose the names of the particular few that were to be distressed and instructed the officer to proceed to secure satisfaction for the city's claims at once. The Mayor advised a few days notice in order to give the delinquent an opportunity to look up receipts that might (as had happened frequently) be in existence; but such fair-minded consideration for the rights of others was neglected. Let all be treated alike, impartially and without prejudice.

Preparing for the Season.

The Plainfield Saengerbund has appointed a committee that is already engaged in arranging for a number of entertainments of sociability and dance to be given by the Society during the coming Winter. The first will take place on Thanksgiving eve to which invitations will shortly be issued.

Classes in German.

Professors Lyon and Lewinsky are issuing invitations to the public generally to visit the Plainfield Academy on Seventh street and witness the instruction of the German language by the natural method. Classes for ladies and gentlemen are to be formed at once to meet Mondays and Thursdays at 8 p. m., and Tuesdays and Fridays at 4 p. m. The terms are ten dollars for a quarter of twenty lessons.

North Plainfield Votes $2,000.

A special town meeting was held in North Plainfield on Saturday of last week, for the purpose of voting an amount of money to repair the roads and other property damaged by the recent severe rains. The meeting was held by order of the Town Committee and the voting was done at the usual polling places. The following was the result:

A Beautiful Interior.

Upon the completion of the tinting and frescoing that is now going on in the interior of the Trinity Reformed church under direction of New York artists, the ceilings and side-walls of that auditorium will excel in quiet beauty and rich effect anything of the kind in this city. The designs are elegant without being gaudy, and combine the softest tints for ground work overlaid with stenciled arabesques and other patterns in a manner attractive and entirely pleasing. The whole will be most gratifying to the eye after the loud coloring that formerly produced so harsh an effect upon good taste and artistic feeling.

A Card in Explanation.

As the work of the Relief Association may not be generally understood except by those who are working with us, we have thought it advisable to explain that the legitimate work of our society is to provide sewing and work of all kinds for those who are able and willing to help themselves, thus maintaining their self-respect and that of their families thereby decreasing the race of the paupers in our city. Our co-operation with the city is this: to investigate doubtful cases whenever requested to do so by the Overseer and to fill orders given by him, with supplies from our store room for which the city pays us. The advantage being that our Superintendent fills the order with plain suitable food.

MRS. GEO. W. FERRY,
President.

Wanted—Base Ball Grounds.

Owing to the reckless carelessness of a certain class of the community, the fences surrounding the grounds of the Crescent B. B. Association were broken by being climbed over and stray cattle getting into the field committed so much damage the owner of the lots has refused further permission for their use by the Association. Of course the one suffering from the damage is to be sympathized with, and he most certainly has a right to do as he pleases with his own property, but had he notified the Association of the facts in the case and the amount of the loss sustained, it would have cheerfully paid the bill and taken steps to prevent a repetition of the injury in the future. We would now suggest that some of our philanthrophic citizens do what they can towards securing for next season suitable grounds for the moral and healthful recreations of the Crescents.

A Sad Accident.

Mr. Wm Kerley formerly of this city and now a resident of Pamrapo, lost his little boy on Friday last under circumstances particularly painful. A trench had been dug alongside of the cess-pool of Mr. Kerley's residence for convenience in repairing the outer wall of that receptacle. This was about three feet deep, and having become filled with water little Willie Kerley, aged about six years, was sailing his toy boats on the miniature pond when seen and forbidden so to do by his father on Saturday morning. A few hours after the boy was missed by his mother, and his hat being found floating on the surface of the water in the trench, the worst was feared. The assistance of neighbors being secured, the body of the little lad was found with life extinct at the bottom of the ditch. On Monday from the residents of friends on Front street in this city, the remains were buried.

The Y. M. C. A. Course.

We are not able this week to speak as fully of the arrangement of the Sixteenth Annual Course of Entertainments of the Y. M. C. A., as we should desire. The selection of attractions, we need only say, is in charge of Mr H. Otis Newman whose taste and judgment in making up the list of previous years have always resulted to the gratification of the patrons and the profit of the Association. The dates are not as yet all made, and one of the entertainments—to complete the seven—is still to be selected. A glance, however, at what has been decided upon, will give an idea of the unusual excellence of the Course of 1882-83.

The first entertainment will be given on the evening of Thursday, Nov 2d, one week earlier than last year. It will consist of a grand pot-pourri of vocal and instrumental music and elocutionary effort. The artists of the occasion—such a bright particular star—will be Mlle Camilla Urso as violinist; Miss Emily Spader, soprano; Miss Marguerite Hall, mezzo-soprano; S. Liebling, pianist, and A. P. Burbank, elocutionist. A more attractive array, we think, has never before been brought forward at the same time in this city.

The second of the Course will be a concert on Thanksgiving night under the able direction of Plainfield's favorite—Prof. E. J. Fitzhugh. It is too early to give any idea of the make-up of the programme, but we can say that efforts are being made for the introduction of unusually attractive musical features. Following these opening numbers of the Course will be a second appearance of the Royal Hand Bell Ringers under the leadership of Duncan S. Miller, which last year gave one of the most pleasing (as it was the most novel) entertainments of the season. That talented elocutionist, Chas. Roberts, will occupy another evening, and Lieut. Danenhower, of the ill-fated Jeannette, will relate his personal experiences of that terrible journey in the Artic regions. Mr. Wm. Parsons, than whom no more entertaining lecturer appears before the public, will again favor Plainfield, and some other talented speaker will probably be selected to complete the Course.

They Say.

That the bass parts of the Y. M. C. A. Glee Club is a little too heavy for the air.

That one of Plainfield's many doctors when he is not sure what is the matter, calls it malaria and prescribes quinine.

That when he comes the second time and is still in ignorance, he prescribes bromide.

That the Crescent-avenue church has two choirs—one "up front" and the other in the organ gallery.

That the latter is merely an accompaniment for the former, which makes up for lack of numbers by its volume of sound.

That one is generally about a measure behind the other.

That the Union Club may give a reception to Oskey Wilde at its rooms upon the evening that author of the delirium tremens of art lectures in Plainfield.

(The ladies do) that O'Wilde's extremities, clad in bicycle pants, are a something of a distinct individuality, rather subdued and pensive, with a dash of pathos and faint suggestion of infinite tenderness. Oh! My!

That a daughter of a prominent Councilman was the most admired and favored of the pretty waiter girls that graced the lunch-tent of the W. C. T. U. at the late Fair.

That she received in fees a total of $1.50.

That the ministers have all returned to their pulpits and the war against Satan will proceed with renewed vigor.

That the Devil undoubtedly takes advantage of the vacation of the clergy and deserves all the reproach that will be heaped upon him.

That we are not to be afflicted with that worn-out lecturer, Jno. B. Gough, during the coming Y. M. C. A. course of entertainments.

That there are 2,000 young men in Plainfield outside of the pale of the church that need praying for.

That there are at least 5,000 old men in this city—many of them inside of the pale of the church—that need praying for, also.

Grace Church.

Bishop Scarborough will preach a sermon to the Guild of the Parish, in Grace Church, on Tuesday next. Service to commence at 8 o'clock p. m.

The Industrial School.

This project, which, under the care of the Ladies Relief Association, has during the past been productive of so much good in its particular way, re-opened for the coming season at Warren Mission Chapel, last Saturday afternoon. The object is the teaching of poor children the elements of plain sewing, and the untiring labors of a number of young ladies of the city are devoted to the purpose. During this Winter extra pains will be taken in the instruction of the scholars, and the results promise to be more than ever of general satisfaction. The school will open every Saturday at 3 o'clock, p. m.

The First Sociable.

On Friday evening of last week, the Young People's Association of the Crescent avenue church held its first purely social, literary and musical gathering of the season, in the church parlors. The occasion being principally inaugurative, as extensive a programme as usual was not offered, although what it lacked in quantity was more than completed in quality. The pastor, the Rev. Dr. Bliss, favored the large attendance present with his elocutionary talents, and Miss Gillies also read with pleasing effect. Mrs. Holmes, whose piano performances, are always listened to with much enjoyment, and Miss Alice Holmes whose ability on the same instrument is well known, contributed their talents to the general entertainment.

The officers elected for the new year were: President—I. C. Pearson. Vice President—Leslie M. Daniels. Secretary—Theodore Miller, Jr. Treasurer—Collins Bliss. With an able Entertainment Committee appointed, the coming sociables promise to equal the successful ones of the past.

The Look-Out League.

On Monday evening last a number of young ladies of this city, formed themselves into an association under the title of the Look-Out League, the object being to unitedly use their efforts towards the assistance of the Children's Home of Plainfield. The present formation was really a reorganization of an alliance with the same purpose that last year accomplished results that were very gratifying; but the intentions and aims of the coming season are on a much larger scale that was before contemplated. The League will meet every week and devote the abilities of its members to the making of numerous and varied articles of use and adornment, for the construction of which contributions of necessary material will be kindly received and justly appreciated. These articles will be subsequently disposed of at a grand parlor sale to take place during the Winter, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the cause referred to. The ladies present at the organization of Monday evening were the Misses Laura Rushmore, Emma Demarest, Mary Mosher, Jean Murray, Eleanor Demarest, Lizzie Underhill, Ellen Holmes, Jennie Demarest, Julia Ketcham, Alice Holmes, Carrie Elliott, Clara Dunn, Carrie Dewey, Maggie Bird, Alice Lansing and Mrs. S. R. Struthers.

An Explosion.

The former residence of Henry Smith, Esq., on Seventh street, recently purchased by Mr. Fisk, the New York banker, for the occupancy of his son and the latter's new bride, has since been undergoing extensive repairs that transformed it into one of the most elegant homes in Plainfield. The painters, plumbers and other artisans and mechanics had finished their contracts and carpets were being laid and everything prepared for the coming of the new couple, when an accident occurred that will somewhat delay completion. One afternoon last week as dusk came on, one of the carpet-sewers desiring to finish the job in hand requested a workman in one of the upper rooms to light the gas. Immediately upon striking a match a terrific explosion, took place that tore down much of the wall in the room besides the ceiling below. A great deal of expensive frescoing was thus destroyed and the result of many days' labor ruined. It is supposed that in making additions or extending connections an opening was left in the pipes from which the gas had been escaping some time. The room had thus become filled with gas and the explosion followed as a consequence of lighting the match. The repair of the damage was commenced at once, and very soon this beautiful residence will be in a state of elegant completion befitting the bride that will adorn it. Mr. & Mrs. Fisk arrived on Tuesday.

Personalia.

We regret to learn that our fellow citizen S. S. Lancaster, Esq., during his Summer sojourn, lost his valuable horses from an equine disease prevalent in Maine.

Mr. Powers, who the past year has been residing on Fifth street, has removed with his wife and family to Wilmington, N. C., where he intends engaging in business.

Mr. Chas. Maas, President of the Plainfield Saengerbund and Mrs. Maas, are naturally happy and justly proud over the birth to them of a beautiful little girl baby which arrived during Tuesday last.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Spicer were most agreeably surprised a Saturday evening last, by a large number of their friends that visited their residence on Fifth street and celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. S., in a royal manner.

Miss Kitty Keljey of this city died at her father's residence in Westfield, during Wednesday evening of last week, of consumption, after a lingering illness. The deceased was in the eighteenth year of her age. She was buried in the cemetery of St. Mary's Church on Friday last.

Mr. Werner Heideloff, the genial proprietor of the Farmer's Hotel on Somerset street, is still confined to his house by a very serious illness under which he has been suffering for some weeks. The state of Mr. Heideloff's health is considered very critical, although his many friends sincerely hope for his speedy recovery.

Gen'l. Wm. H. Sterling of this city was one of the invited guests present upon the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the wedding of Judge and Mrs. R. S. Green, at their residence in Elizabeth, last Friday afternoon. Ex-Gov. McClellan, Chancellor Runyon, Hon. Courtland Parker with their families and others were also present.

Mr. William H. Egbert a former well-known resident of this city and one of its most popular young merchants, is on from Toombstone, Arizona, where he has been engaged in business for the past year. It is his intention to make an extended visit among his many friends in Plainfield, and possibly to remain permanently in this section of the country.

The Semi-Centennial of the M. E. Church.

During Saturday afternoon and Sunday next, the Methodist Episcopal church of this city will hold special services commemorative of the Fiftieth Anniversary of its organization. The programme will include many features of pleasing interest, and the occasion in its novelty and general entertainment will undoubtedly never be excelled as it has never been equalled before in this city. A cordial invitation is extended to all to be present, as it is sincerely desired that the members of other churches enjoy with the Methodists the musical, social and literary diversions of the occasion.

On Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the church, the ceremonies will open with a Re-union and Memorial Service conducted by the Rev. L. R. Dunn, D.D., presiding elder of the Elizabeth District. The occasion will be a reunion of those living who in past years had acted as pastors of the church, as well as a service full of rememberance of those who have passed away. Of the twenty-nine who during the fifty years of the existence of the Church had served as its pastors, eighteen are still living and are all expected to be present.

At seven o'clock in the evening the Rev. Thos. H. Stockton, present pastor of the church, will deliver a most interesting Historical Sketch of the rise and progress of the Plainfield M. E. Church, to be followed by a most enjoyable programme of vocal and instrumental music. At the conclusion of this a general social re-union of old friendships between members of the congregation and residents and the former pastors will be indulged in.

At 9 a. m., of Sunday morning, that purely methodistic rite the Love Feast will be observed, to be followed at 10:30 with a sermon by the Rev. C. N. Sims, D. D., Chancellor of Syracuse University. At 3 p. m., there will be a Family Gathering with short addresses by former pastors, and at 7 p. m. a sermon by the Rev. J. M. King, D. D., pastor of the Eighteenth street M. E., Church of N. Y. City. At 8:30 in the evening the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered, at the close of which the Benediction will close this auspicious occasion.

Unusual efforts have been made to insure most gratifying results. The instrumental music besides the organ, will include four brass pieces the performers on all of which will be professionals of musical talent selected from the best. All who attend will be entirely satisfied and amply repaid.

Common Council Meeting.

ADJOURNED MEETING—VARIOUS MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS—THE WATER QUESTION.

Monday evening, Oct 9th.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment.

Present—President Rushmore and Messrs Depew, Gardner, Ginna, Kaufman, Newhall and Thompson—7.

Absent—Messrs Lindsley, Livingston, J Simpson and R. Simpson—4.

Minutes of the last meeting read and on their approval Messrs Ginna, Kaufman, Newhall & Rushmore voted nay.

The question being upon the adoption of the minutes with their record that "the consideration of the Water question be only taken when a full Council be present."

It was subsequently moved and carried that action on the minutes be postponed.

Mr. Depew presented the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 9, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN: Understanding that your honorable body adjourned at its last meeting till to-night to take action by a full board on the favorable recommendation of the special water supply committee, and having heard of an official recommendation (dated June 9) against the introduction of water into Plainfield as proposed, the undersigned remonstrants would again respectfully represent that they think it the better policy for your honorable board to refuse this individual monopoly, for the following reasons among others:

1st. Because the city charter, under which you were chosen by the votes of the people, nowhere empowers the common council to grant such exclusive privilege to a private corporation, nor gives authority to purchase the works at the expiration of the 20 years as proposed.

2d. Because the legislature has already authorized the construction of water works under the control of the city authorities, whenever the inhabitants shall so decide at a public election.

3d. Because other propositions are before your board containing more favorable terms for the construction of water works, and proposals should be solicited from any and all competent engineers, before deciding in favor of one.

4th. Because, as your legal adviser has expressed it, "the public policy of the state is opposed to granting exclusive privileges to individuals, and even the legislature is no longer allowed to exercise such powers."

Therefore in view of these considerations and other questions of vast importance immediately conditioned upon the introduction of water as proposed, and in consideration of the protest of citizens representing over one million dollars in real estate, we most earnestly request that your honorable body do not accede to the proposed proposition of the Plainfield Water Company.

Signed,

D J Marshall, A Berry, John Ross, James Brand, John W Laing, D F Randolph, F M French, Isaac F Brown, E F Thorn, Chas S A Davis, M M Thorn, J E Martine, Job Male, O E Hendley, John B Brown, Albert O Thorn, J G Laing.

Messrs Livingston and J. Simpson entered at this time.

Mr. Depew moved the reference of above to the Lamps Com. Lost.

Mr. Newhall moved it be laid on table with other papers relating to Water Question. Carried.

The President presented a communication from the Board of Education asking for the amount (about $5,500) said to have been paid over to the County Collector by the city.

Ref'd to Spec. Com., on late Collector's books.

Mr. Livingston presented a petition of VanDeventer & Pope to erect dwelling on Second street. Ref'd to Lamps Com.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 7th, 1882.

J. Van Winkle, Esq., Treasurer.

DEAR SIR:—Looking to a perfect understanding in regard to the disposition of the monies to be collected under the tax levy of 1882, I would ask if you interpret the law as calling upon you to pay over all monies collected on account of levy of 1882, whether of state, county or city, to the county collector until the claim of the county shall have been satisfied. And if you will decline to honor warrants drawn against monies collected on account of the city levy of 1882 until after the state and county claim is liquidated. Your early reply will oblige.

Very truly yours,
S. A. GINNA,
Chairman Law and Ord. Committee.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 9th, 1882.

Mr. S. A. Ginna, Chairman of Law and Ord. Committee.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your inquiry of 7th inst., can only refer you to the decisions of the Supreme Court of N. J. "Freeholders of Union County vs. Treasurer of the City of Plainfield," and my reply to the Finance Com. of the Council of 1881, filed with the City Clerk. Under these decisions the Treasurer is debarred from paying out any of the monies received from the Collector on account of the Tax Levy of 1882, until the claims of the State & County have been satisfied in full I and shall act in accordance with, these decisions.

Yours with respect,
J. VAN WINKLE,
City Treasurer.

Mr. Newhall offered the following in connection:

Resolved, That the law and ordinance committee be and they are hereby instructed to communicate with the board of chosen freeholders of Union county, and ascertain if they are disposed to extend any privileges to the city of Plainfield looking to the use by the city of moneys collected on account of the city tax levy of 1882, or if they will insist upon a strict interpretation of the late decision, bearing upon the right of the county to exact all moneys collected on account of taxes until the claim of the county shall have been satisfied.

Adopted.

Mr. Ginna moved the adoption of a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the corporation attorney be, and he hereby is, requested to render to this council his written opinion, as to the right of the city to direct that all moneys collected on account of taxes levied, excepting the fire tax, shall be paid by the collector into the city treasury, and if, in his opinion, all such moneys paid into the treasury, are subject to the state and county claim under the ruling of the Supreme Court of this State, until such claim shall have been satisfied.

Adopted

Mr. Newhall offered the following:

Resolved, That Jeremiah VanWinkle, city treasurer, is hereby directed to make at once a specific demand on Joseph B. Coward, late township treasurer, for the interest on $766.10 for four years at 6 per cent per annum, namely on the sum recently paid said VanWinkle by the said Coward, and that the demand set forth plainly that the demand is made in lieu of any other demand or claim for [illegible] said Coward to the city of Plainfield, and is not to be construed as waiving any rights of said city whatever to money, books or other property which have been or may be demanded of said Coward by said city through its officers, but is simply a demand for legal interest on the $766.10, which said Coward has, by paying the same, admitted that he has for a recent date kept back from the said city of Plainfield and its treasurer.

Adopted.

Mr. Kaufman moved to consider the vote to lay the Water Question on the table taken at last meeting.

The amendment above was then carried—Messrs Depew, Gardner, J. Simpson and Thompson voting nay.

The rules were suspended to allow Mr. J. Simpson, from the Aud. Com., to report as correct the claim of J. C. Meeker, $120 65. Warrant ordered drawn.

The Council then adjourned.

Photographic-Illustrative Lecture.

Our readers will all be pleased to learn that Rev. Dr. D. C. Potter of New York will give his new lecture on "Egypt" at the Park Avenue Baptist Church, Thursday evening, Oct. 19th, at 8 o'clock. The illustrations are of the finest character, covering a space of 484 feet, some of them magnificently colored and are of especial interest to every scholar and teacher, old and young. No resident of Plainfield should fail of being present on this interesting occasion. Nothing since our own civil war has caused so much commotion throughout the world as the recent war in Egypt, and no topic is more interesting at this time than that of this strange country. Dr. Potter probably owns the most valuable photoscopic instrument in the world and his pictures cannot be excelled. As a lecturer, he is witty and well informed, having spent several years in Egypt, and his evening's talk while explaining the views will be exceedingly interesting. Some of the principle scenes represented are Alexandria, Port Said, Suez Canal, Ships of War, Embarkation of Soldiers, the Nile, Boats, Cairo, Mosques, Palaces, Streets, Obelisks, Pyramids, Sphinx, Tombs, Ruins of Karnak, Heliopolis, Persepolis, etc. The admission price is fixed low, at 25 cents apiece, for old and young. Tickets can be had at the door or of the druggists. Doors open at seven o'clock, and as there will be no reserved seats we advise prompt attendance to all parties desiring seats.

A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

DUTY TO OTHERS.—Chambersburg, July 25th, 1875.—This is to let the people know that I, Anna Maria Krider, wife of Tobias Krider, am now past seventy-four years of age. My health has been very bad for some years past; I was troubled with weakness, bad cough, dyspepsia, great debility and constipation of the bowels. I was so miserable I could hardly eat anything. I heard of Hop Bitters and was resolved to try them. I have only used three bottles, and I feel wonderfully good, well and strong again. My bowels are regular, my appetite good, and cough all gone. I feel so well that I think it my duty to let the people know, as so many knew how bad I was, what the medicine has done for me, so they can cure themselves with it. ANNA M. KRIDER, wife of Tobias Krider.

FATHER IS GETTING WELL.—My daughter says: "How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters. He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable, and we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A Lady of Rochester, New York.

TRAPPING WOLVES.

In Siberia, wolves are caught in various ways, sometimes by poisoned bait and again by traps. One of the commonest kinds of traps in use is a large circular pen surrounded by a high wooden fence. Outside of this fence is another similar one, perhaps two or three feet distant from the first and running entirely around it. In the centre of the pen is placed a live deer or pig. In the outer fence is a small opening, the door of which swinging inward is left conveniently and seductively open. The wolf scents the live bait in the centre of the pen and after vainly endeavoring to leap over the protecting barrier and get at it, finds the door standing open and at once enters in. The passage between the inner and outer fence is wide enough to enable him to move ahead comfortably, but is too narrow to admit of his turning about.

Once in he must keep going straight ahead, and very naturally thinking that in this direction lies his prey, he presses on, licking his chops in anticipation of a rich feast. Having completed the circle of the pen, he arrives at his starting point and finds his further progress completely barred by the door which stands open as when he entered. Pushing against this, he shuts it close in order to get by, and has effectually made himself prisoner. Then the crafty huntsmen, who has all the time been concealed within, shoots or spears the animal from the top of the fence, draws his carcass within so as to save it, and opens the outer door again to welcome the next visitor.

When wolves are plenty two men or more in one of these pens have a very busy time for a number of days, and are scarcely able to slaughter or skin the animals as they would like to rush in unconsciously to their death. It not unfrequently happens that the men are kept in these pens for a number of days at a time, being unable to get out on account of wolves, which surround them and would tear them to pieces the moment they made their appearance. The only thing for the men to do under such circumstances is to consider themselves in a state of seige and to keep on trapping and slaughtering until the animals, starved out and disappointed, abandon their position and skurry off to another part of the country.

In localities where the wolves are most numerous, wolf hunting is regarded as a regal and is also a frequent sport. It is sometimes engaged in by large parties of hunters, and again by one of two individuals alone. Like most hunting for sport in all countries, it is principally practiced by the wealthier men who have both the time and the means and the daring to pursue it. The latter is a very essential qualification, for the man who engages in it literally takes his life in his hand. It is anything but boy's play to enter upon it, and a great deal of nerve and coolness, as well as skill, is required of the man who expects to come off unscathed. The slightest wavering or the slightest misjudgment may at any moment throw the hunter into the very midst of the hunted, where no power on earth can avail him for a single instant.

The slightest accident means not only death in less than a second, but also means utter annihilation for the man upon whom a pack of hungry infuriated wolves leap; for almost before he knows what has happened, he is torn limb from limb—devoured, hat, coat, boots and all, so that not a shred is left of him for his sorrowing friends to hold a funeral service over. It is, perhaps, this horrible fate that is always staring the wolf-hunter in the face, that adds to the fascination of the sport, so that there are few, who have the opportunity afforded that can resist the temptation or forego the exciting sport.

ONE CLAW ON ME.

"There is a certain man in this town whom I'm going to lick until he won't be out of bed for six months after, and I want to know what it will cost me."

So said a man who entered a Griswold street law office yesterday, and it was plain to be seen that his dander was way up.

"Let's see," mused the lawyer. "I'll defend you for ten dollars. If you lick him in a first class manner your fine will be about twenty-five dollars. Then there will be a few dollars cost; say enough to make the whole thing foot up forty dollars. I think that I can safely promise that it won't cost you over that."

"Forty dollars!" Forty dollars for licking a man! Why, I can't go that."

"Well, pull his nose, then. The last case I had of that sort the fine was only fifteen dollars. That will reduce the gross sum to thirty."

"I want to tear him all to pieces, but I can't afford to pay like that for the fun. How much would it cost to spit on him?"

"Well, that's an assault you know, but the fine might not be over ten dollars. I guess twenty-five dollars would see you through."

"Lands! how I do want to crush that man! Suppose I knock his hat off?"

"Well, about twenty dollars would cover that."

"I can hardly hold myself, but twenty dollars is pretty steep. Can't I call him a liar?"

"Oh, yes. I think fifteen dollars would cover that."

"Well, I'll see about it. I'm either going to call him a liar or else tell everybody that he is no gentleman, or else give him an awful pounding. I'll see you again."

"My fee is five dollars," observed the lawyer.

"What for?"

"For my advice."

The pulverizer glared at him for half a minute, and then laid down a "V," and started out with the remark:

"I'm going straight to that man and beg his pardon, and tell him that I'm the biggest fool in Detroit! Thank heaven that you didn't get but one claw on me!"

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE FAIR.

Never before had such extensive preparations been made for the great American Institute Fair as on September 27th. Mr. Chas. Wager Hull, the Gen'l Superintendent, is to be credited with improving and making ready the exhibition. The buildings were lighted by some 300 electric lights. Machinery Hall and the Art Gallery were places of much importance, especially the former, for great pains had been taken to secure many interesting machines never before exhibited. M. Arbuckle, conductor, and Salvini will give grand concerts at 3 and 8 p. m. each day. This is the same gentleman who rendered such superb music last year, and his concerts are alone well worth the admission fee. Mr. G. L. Hogan, the press agent, will extend every courtesy to the members of the press, and cheerfully give them all the information they desire.

HOW TO SPOIL A HUSBAND.

Snarl at him all the time.

Pay no attention to expenses.

Give as much as he can earn in a month for a new bonnet.

Raise a row if he dare to bow pleasantly to an old lady friend.

Tell him as plainly as possible that you married him for a living.

Keep the parlor for company, and don't let him put his foot in it.

Get everything the woman next door gets whether you can afford it or not.

Provide any sort of a picked up dinner for him when you don't expect strangers.

Tell him the children inherit all their mean traits of character from his side of the family.

Let it out sometimes when you are good and mad that you wish you had married some other fellow that you used to go with.

Give him to understand as soon as possible after the honeymoon that kissing is good enough for spooney lovers, but that for married folks it is confoundedly silly. If he takes to kissing the cook or chambermaid don't be too hard on him.

If he has an extra amount of brain work and comes home with his nervous system all on a stretch—don't try to keep the children quiet. Tell them to make all the noise they want to, and their father is nothing but an old cross patch anyway.

GUITEAU'S POISONED BOUQUET.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—Professor W. C. Tilden to-day submitted to District-Attorney Corkhill his official report of a chemical examination of the poisoned bouquet that was given to Guiteau by his sister, Mrs. Scoville, the day before his execution. The report says that the large bud (a half-opened flower) contained over five grains of "white arsenic" (arsenious acid). This quantity was not only sufficient to cause death to any human being, had it been swallowed, but, owing probably to ignorance, was so largely in excess of a fatal dose that the intent of the person who prepared the flowers would have been defeated by emetics. The original amount of arsenic was greater than that found, as the petals of the flowers failed to retain in a dry state some which adhered when moist.

Mr. Corkhill says that he is trying to discover who it was that poisoned the flowers and that if the person could be discovered he would be held to answer the charge.

POETRY.

WHEN I'M ENTHRONED.

Come lay your tired head upon my heart
And let me kiss those eyelids far apart,
And white, with silken lashes shining down
Upon sweet eyes all soft and warm and brown.
Thus,—let me push the masses of your hair
Aside, and trace the veins o'er skin so fair,
And pure, I scarce dare touch, for fear you may
Like some pale shadow slip and glide away.
Give me your hands—all warm within mine own,
They shall forget that e'er they toiled alone,
That e'er they wrung themselves with cold or fears
That e'er they brushed away hot blinding tears.
Too long you wore a proud and silent air,
So like a royal queen, I did not dare
To even question with my loving eyes,
Since I so poor scarce dare my hopes to prize.
Why did I not your caprice sooner brook!
And speak? you might have killed me with a look!
But then it would have been e'en sweet to die
By a swift dagger-thrust from that loved eye.

You smile—and perfect creeps the sunny light
Of that slow-smile up to your soft eye's height.
Ah, you are all my own now. Not so, sweet?
From eye lash to the tip of tiny feet!
You did not dream I loved you all those years
Untouched, unwoed by all that life endears?
The mem'ry of a kind act e'er endears
The actor of it, to the hearts of those
Who feel the action, and a warm light glows
Within them when remembering it. May you
Then feel it a remembrance sweet and true
To think, "he sought such love thro' all those years,
All those long days and nights, while I wept tears
He loved me just the same as now. They say

The queen whose head uneasy wears a crown
Will sometimes passionately throw it down,
And—like a woman—seek a perfect rest:
From all her sorrows—on a subject's breast:
You were my queen, your crown was riches' pride,
Now that you deign to cast it all aside,
Let mine the loyal subject's bosom be
Whereon you lay your dear head willingly;
And thus, although you stoop a little so
To one who kept his heart in store for you—
'Twill raise me royally to feel and know
That at the last my queen did bow to me
And call me here—and robe me royally
In golden smiles, and crimson-flushing joy,
And scarlet kisses passionate and coy;
Then, with white, woven arms caressing zoned
Behold me proudly thus—a King enthroned.'

STRANGE POWER TO RESIST FIRE.

Nathan Coker is of pure African lineage, black as ebony and of stalwart frame. He is now somewhere between sixty and seventy years of age, and has resided all his life in the lower part of Tuckahoe Neck, Md. He has no knowledge of books—cannot even repeat the alphabet—but is much above mediocrity in point of general intelligence and good, hard, corn-field common sense. When quite young he conceived the idea of becoming fire-proof, and before he was twenty-five he was a veritable fire-king. How he acquired the power to perform the feats of placing his hands and arms in a vessel of boiling water and keeping them there for ten minutes, licking a red-hot shovel, holding in his mouth molten lead, and even swallowing it, as well as many others more daring, without apparent injury, no one knows, or has he ever revealed the secret. In fact, it is doubtful if he can himself explain the mystery; but he can and does handle bars of iron glowing with white heat, eat glowing charcoal made from hickory or oak wood, walk barefooted on a red-hot bar of iron, sixteen feet long, with perfect coolness and deliberation. These facts are attested by many respectable witnesses. He used to delight in frightening the ignorant and superstitious country people, to whom he was unknown, whenever he could find a crowd gathered around the stove in a village or country store, by walking in, opening the stove door and running his hand down in the fire and deliberately taking a live coal in his fingers and coolly place it in his pipe and walk off.

He was at one time on exhibition and his strange feats created considerable excitement, but owing to his dislike of notoriety and lack of education he retired from the stage. His power of resisting the effects of fire is singular, and has never, so far as I know, been explained, though he has been examined by a number of scientific men.—Wilmington (Del) News.

A CHILD'S NOTION ABOUT THUNDER

It is seldom that any but distant rumbles of thunder are heard here in this part of Nevada. The sharp, rattling peals that rent the air yesterday were therefore something new and astonishing to most of the youngsters of the city. While some left for their homes with eyes distended and hair flying, others darted forth into the open air and began gazing wildly about to see what had "busted." One bright little fellow, who was out on a porch watching the descending hail, as it rattled on the fences and bounced upon the ground, when the first heavy crash came rushed in-doors, crying: "Oh! ma! Who's a-shooting?"

"God, my dear," quietly said the mother.

"What did He do it for?"

"Well, I presume to show us that He is abroad in the storm—that He is everywhere."

"Well—well," cried the little fellow, with eyes fairly popping from his head—"I'll bet—I'll bet—"

"What, my dear?"

"I'll bet He busted His gun that time."

ONLY AN AMATEUR PREVARICATOR.

Two years ago a little niece of Mr. Harrison, who lives near Rome, Ga., dropped a gold ring into the creek while playing. Last week Mr. Harrison caught a turtle in the creek, and when they dressed it for the table there was his little niece's lost ring, bright and unimpaired by the ravages of time and digestion as when she lost it. Mr. Harrison is not a professional liar, either. He is only an amateur, but sometimes, when the star liar is feeling unwell, Mr. Harrison goes on in leading parties, and he does very well. His style is rather old-fashioned, and smacks somewhat of the nursery tales, but he has talent, and if he keeps on the time may not be far distant when well-earned success will crown his brow with fadeless laurels, and nobody of the State of Georgia will believe him on oath.—Burlington Hawkeye.

HOW TO ARRANGE FLOWERS.

A very good device for arranging flowers so as to preserve them fresh, consists of a piece of cork about a quarter of an inch thick, circular in form, and perforated with holes like the holes of a watering pot. The diameter is to correspond to the size of the saucer or shallow dish with which it is to be used. The cork floating on top of the water supports the flowers, whose stems are inserted in the holes. For the display of small flowers and those having short stems, this method seems well adapted; possibly it may be better that damp sand, though that is doubtful, but as the cork may be preserved, it would always be at hand, and it might not be convenient sometimes to procure sand.

Some hotel clerk must have originated the expression, "There is always room at the top."

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Director having called Freeholder Hubbard to the chair, proceeded to read the following communication:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union.

GENTLEMEN—

It is unnecessary for me to inform either you or the people of this county that since your last meeting our county has been visited by a freshet remarkable for its rapid rise, and destruction to life and property. I only do it that the results following it may be all matters of record, and each member of the Board and citizen of the county may know the reasons that govern and control our actions, together with the method of dealing with these obligations of the people one to the other that rests upon us, their chosen representatives, to meet in emergencies of this class, and, gentlemen, we must be ready to give these matters all the attention it is possible to give them. We know that all the pecuniary compensation a Chosen Freeholder is allowed to receive would not pay for the time and thought already given to this great loss of life and property, yet obligations go with the office, and all of us are required by law (and I think each of us realize it) to give the public that which they have a right to demand, namely, duty, honestly and faithfully performed by those on whom public trusts have been conferred.

I think it proper to direct attention to the causes of this great destruction of county bridges.

On Friday and Saturday, the 22d and 23d of last month, the heavy fall of rain caused the breaking of nearly every dam and reservoir in our county, and all these waters flowed through the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway. This carried loss and desolation to many households. The damage done to private property must be very large, so large and serious in comparison that the county's loss is insignificant. But to all this must be added, and most to be regretted the loss of human life. When we consider the immense amount of water stored in ponds and streams in Livingston, Orange and Milburn of Essex county, and in Summit, Springfield, Westfield, Cranford, Fanwood and a part of Plainfield in Union county, and Raritan township in Middlesex county, is it any wonder when seven or nine inches of falling water (causing the breaking of dams) is added, that this torrent of water carried all before it as it passed under and over the arches of the bridges of Rahway. After viewing the locations, the only wonder is that a stone is left to show where a bridge ever stood, or that man had time to retreat from dangerous grounds. Many of these bridges though in ruins, show the use of the best materials and no fault in their construction. The greater loss has occurred on arch bridges of stone or brick.

The waters passing through Plainfield came from Somerset county and out of Summit and New Providence, from lands southerly of the water shed of the Passaic, and out of Westfield and Fanwood, from lands westerly of the water shed of the Rahway River over and through many broken dams.

The waters passing through Elizabeth came out of Essex county, and from Union township easterly of the water-shed of Rahway River, over and through broken dams, the most serious being a break in the reservoir that supplies the city with water.

The number of bridges totally destroyed or where the superstructure is a total loss, is 27.

The number partially destroyed (some of them very large and pretty badly wrecked), is 53.

From a careful estimate it appears to me that it will require over one hundred thousand dollars, rather than under that amount, to place the bridges of the county in as good condition as they were on the morning of the 23d of last month.

The law contemplates the rebuilding or repairing of all these by temporary loans, which loans are now required to be put in the next tax levy.

I would have called a special meeting of your Board, but the law required a notice of ten days, and as your regular meeting was only twelve days off, it was concluded to call a meeting to act as a Committee of the Whole, so that each member could consider the "sudden destruction, partial or entire," to the bridges of the county. In response to that notice every member met promptly in the city of Plainfield, on Wednesday, the 27th ultimo, and again in Elizabeth and Linden township on the 28th, and again in Rahway and Clark township on the 29th, at which time a committee of five was appointed for each of the remaining townships, to examine and report at your first meeting as to the "sudden destruction, partial or entire," of county bridges, by freshet of the 22d and 23d of September, with their recommendation in each individual case as to the amounts needed for repairs.

The recommendations of those committees and the conclusions of the members when acting as a Committee of the Whole will be laid before you at this meeting, for such action as the Board may deem proper. Most Respectfully,

C. W. L. MARTINE,
Director.

Elizabeth, Oct. 5, 1882.

Freeholder Stover moved the communication be received and spread upon the record.

Which was carried by a unanimous vote.

A recommendation from Coroner H. J. Stratemeyer, Jr., that the jurors on the inquest held on the body of Thos. McKeon (who came to his death on the dock at Elizabethport, Sept. 3, 1882) be increased, was read.

Freeholder Runkle moved it lie on the table.

Carried.

Reports of special committees appointed to ascertain the damage caused by the recent freshet, in the different cities and townships of Union county.

From Committee on Township of Union.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—

The undersigned a committee appointed by the Director to examine into the "sudden destruction either partial or entire" of county bridges in the township of Union caused by the freshet of the 23d of last month and report at the first meeting of your Board as to the necessity of repairing or rebuilding with the probable cost in each case, beg leave to submit the accompanying resolution for the action of the Board, and recommend its adoption.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

GEORGE W. DOTY, Chairman.
WILLIAM J. THOMPSON,

THE COLD JUNE OF 1816.

"A few warm days!" How eagerly all classes looked for them in that memorable cold time sixty-six years ago. It was called a dry season. But little rain fell. The wind blew steadily from the North, cold and fierce. Mothers knit extra socks and mittens for their children in the spring, and woodpiles, that usually disappeared during the warm spell, in front of the houses, were speedily built up again. Planting and shivering were done together, and the farmers, who worked out their taxes on the country roads, wore overcoats and mittens. In a town in Vermont a flock of sheep belonging to a farmer had been sent, as usual to their pasture. On the 17th of June a heavy snow fell, the cold was intense, and the owner started away at noon to look for his sheep.

"Better start the neighbors after me soon, wife," he said in jest before leaving; "being in the middle of June I may get lost in the snow."

Night came, the storm increased, and the family sent out for help and started in search. One after the other of the neighbors turned out to look for the missing man. The snow had covered up his tracks and not until the third day was he found. He was on the side of a hill with both feet frozen, unable to move.

HE WAS SATISFIED.

A young society swell recently took advantage of a sunny afternoon to call on one of Chicago's belles for the purpose of inviting her to the theatre. As the young lady in question was not in, her sister undertook to entertain the young gentleman. After the usual limited round of society topics had been talked over the gentleman took the lady to task for her frequent adjectival appellation or "dear" and "darling" in speaking of her, averring that in opinion it was affected. The young lady languidly denied this. At this moment the absent sister was seen returning, and the incredulous young man proposed to put the matter to a test by concealing himself behind the curtains and thus overhear their conversation unhampered by society restrictions. The young lady assented to this plan with evident willingness and the doubter was effectually concealed in the lace mazes of the curtain.

"Why, my dear, how long you have been absent," said she to the returning sister as she entered the parlor. "You dear darling, why did you not come sooner?" "Well," responded the matter-of-fact young belle, "what in the world is the matter with you? Are you crazy?" The young man grinned in triumph behind the curtains; but now came the wily lady's turn. "My dear," said she, "you don't know what you have missed. Mr. A. was here to invite you to the theatre." "Don't I," was the response. "I am glad I was absent. He is the silliest young man in Chicago."

There was a smothered groan, like the cry of Polonius behind the curtain.

VOX POPULI.

A manifest evil in this country at the present day is the prevalent disposition to hastily acquire riches without honest labor and regardless of the means employed, and a co-relative evil is the favor such a vicious system receives at the hands of legislators.

It is radically wrong and pernicious in the extreme. It generates extravagance, fosters pride, blights industry and morality, condones fraud, and in countless instances works personal disaster. By it the unscrupulous few may clutch immense money power, but the masses of the people grow poorer in consequence, because of the involuntary tribute they are forced to pay.

The enormous fortunes, millions upon millions, now often heard credited to individuals, no more evidence national prosperity than bloated flesh does good health.

They are equally unsound.

We reiterate remarks previously made in these columns, the truth of which time emphatically attests—"that the real wealth of a country consists in moderate and well scattered fortunes, the reward of industry and skill, guaranteed by equal rights and privileges."

Infinitely richer and better is a community with one hundred citizens worth fifty thousand dollars each, the fruit of honest toil, than with one possessing five millions gained by artifice.

The day is coming when the people for their own safety must interpose the might of sovereignty and demand—

Aye! DEMAND!

That legislators, both National and State, shall defend and advance the rights and interests of the people, instead of bowing like abject slaves to serve the will of heartless monopolizers and gamesters.

That capital shall enjoy just protection, but no advantages hostile to labor.

That every business pursuit, however limited, shall have the same opportunity to exist and prosper as the largest.

That the modern gambling process of watering securities, cornering money and merchandise for an artificial rise, and wagering mere chances, shall be stopped by statutory enactment.

That the only legitimate law of trade, supply and demand and the dealing in tangible values, shall be made universally operative, and the only source of genuine wealth and happiness, honest industry and practical enterprise, be rightfully protected.

Then will the American people, as a whole, not only become richer in money values, but in the nobler possession of virtue, liberty and independence.

To preserve Freedom it is absolutely essential for the people to watch all its enemies, scores of whom are deceitfully masked.

The New York Sun figures out that in the next Congress, which will contain 325 members, the Democrats will have a majority of 33 over the Republicans and Independents.

* * *

The New York Tribune thinks the present year will be a memorable one in politics, and that it will be a year of political upheavals and revolts, out of which the formation of new parties is likely to grow. In this political turmoil, however, it discerns a spirit among the people in favor of purer politics and a loftier sense of public duty.

GOLDEN WORDS.

From a speech delivered in Philadelphia recently by Robert E. Pattison, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, we extract as follows:

"One of the gravest evils in our political system is the low estimate of duty held by public functionaries.

This arises from their failure to recognize that fundamental idea of our Government that a public office is a public trust to be executed for the benefit of the whole people.

When this conception of duty is lost sight of or modified, the way is open for an immediate, certain and constant degeneracy of the public service.

A merely mechanical and negligent performance of official functions follows the obliteration of these standards of duty.

A wise economy must be enforced in the public expense.

Profuse expenditure by government is not only burdensome in itself but generates in officials a spirit of profligacy which permeates even private life.

Extravagance breeds extravagance.

Every useless expenditure creates an excuse if it does not cause necessity for further waste."

Those are indeed golden words, and they declare as clearly as tongue can utter or pen indite the genuine principles of Democracy.

And furthermore, their faithful application to the management of every grade of public affairs is absolutely requisite for the permanency of free institutions and the prosperity of the people.

Speaking as he did, Mr. Pattison tersely reiterated the honored political sentiments of Jefferson, the father of the Democratic party, foremost among which were HONESTY and ECONOMY, practical public virtues, more needed in this country at the present day than any other.

It is time for the Democratic party to bury the hatchet of internal strife and inaugurate a crusade, aggressive and determined, for the re-establishment of its original principles and measures of government, a departure from which has filled the land with oppressive taxation, fictitious values, ostentatious wealth, grasping monopolies, gambling speculation, extravagance, profligacy and fraud.

THE SUN AND MILES ROSS.

The New York Sun having failed in its prediction of comet annihilation by the greater luminary of day, and the dire consequences which were to afflict the earth, will doubtless live to witness its malignant opposition to Miles Ross as barren of political effect.—[Constitutionalist.

Dana, of the New York Sun, has never pretended to be a Democrat. At one time he was Assistant Secretary of War under a Republican National Administration, at a time when Stanton was the Chief and so many iniquitous things occurred, at which the country now shudders. Mr. Dana was also said to be a candidate for a prominent appointment in the city of New York when General Grant was President of the United States. But some other fellow got the office, and Dana immediately became a bitter enemy of Grant. Since then he has become a sort of political guerilla, striking at Democrats and Republicans without regard to policy or principle.

In yesterday's Sun is a lengthy editorial devoted to the support of the monopoly candidate for Congress in this district, and opposed to Hon. Miles Ross. Save his votes on the River and Harbor bill nothing is alleged against Mr. Ross except some glittering generalities. And we have no doubt that some of Dana's satellites—probably the one who believes in the motto! "It is cheaper to move than to pay rent"—has been searching the records of Congress for the past eight years in order to convict Mr. Ross of having voted for some job or steal.

If the Sun has not a personal spite against Mr. Ross why does it not come out against the Republicans who voted for the River and Harbor bill? Why does it not denounce Mr. J. Hart Brewer of the Second Congressional District of New Jersey? Or is it true that Jay Gould really has got his clutches on the Sun, as was recently charged by one of its contemporaries? And hence it desires the election of Republicans to the next Congress instead of Democrats, and more particularly Democrats like Mr. Ross, who will not vote for jobs and steals.

Only four Democratic United States Senators voted to sustain President Arthur's veto, and one of those four—Senator Bayard—said recently: "The man who says the River and Harbor bill is a steal is a fool!" Democrats, who is more worthy of credence—the life-long and incorruptible Bayard, or Dana's Sun?

Is the Sun opposed to Mr. Ross because one of its Bohemians failed to obtain the Democratic nomination for Congress in this district two years ago? It looks like it; or there is no other reasonable theory on which to base the Sun's unswerving opposition to Mr. Ross. At all events, Mr. Ross, during his candidacy for Congress, has never dropped checks around the district which were afterward refused payment by the fiscal institution upon which they were drawn. Did any other person perform such "financial" feats? "It is so reported." At all events the articles in the Sun about Mr. Ross bear an impress that might well be charged to a paternity which believes in the motto: "It is cheaper to move than pay rent."—New Brunswick Times.

New York Republicans, are making arrangements, so it is alleged, to have Folger counted in. That they would like to there is no doubt, and that they will have to, if he is ever to reach the gubernatorial chair, is more than certain.

* * *

Honest John Hill Republican Congressman from the Fifth New Jersey District, voted against the River and Harbor bill first, last and all the time. He was rewarded by the virtuous Republicans by being beaten in the nominating convention.

* * *

George William Curtis has written to the New York Civil Service Reform Association in which he says in the most emphatic manner that he shall not advise Republicans to vote for Judge Folger because he cannot advise a course so totally repugnant to all his political convictions.

* * *

The Newark Evening Journal hits the nail on the head when it says "that the opposition to Mr. Harris has died out, owing to the fact that the opposition to him was led by men of notoriously bad reputation."

* * *

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, last week, withdrew from the New York and Brooklyn Association of the Congregational church because he does not believe in a material hell or the future punishment of the body.

CLADEK.

The office of Coroner is one of responsibility and ought to be filled by a citizen every way qualified to discharge its important duties. CLADEK.

VOSSELLER AND GERBER.

Official duty was never more faithfully performed and to greater public satisfaction than it has been by the present County Clerk and Surrogate. Thoroughly versed and scrupulously accurate in the varied and important work of their respective offices, they have uniformly treated all persons with polite attention, and thereby won personal popularity far beyond the limits of party. They fully meet the sound Jeffersonian requirement of "integrity, capability and good report," and should be re-elected by an overwhelming majority—

Vote for
VOSSELLER AND GERBER.

HOWEY'S UNLUCKY DAY.

The Democrats of Congressman Harris' District are a pretty sensible lot after all, take them as a majority. We feared they might be wheedled into placing an Independent candidate in the field, through the influence of the old Ring element, and those pure and disinterested Republicans who love and honor Robeson, Dorsey & Co., but wish to set Mr. Harris up as a "fearful warning" to the young Democracy of the country!

The lamb set up for slaughter is ex-Sheriff Benjamin F. Howey, of Warren County, who was nominated at the Republican Convention held in Somerville on Friday last. Friday is an unlucky day for Mr. Howey. When Sheriff, all his hanging matches occurred on Friday, and now he is to be snowed under a majority of some 4,000, and all because his party held that Friday Convention!—Morristown Banner.

OBEYING HIS CONSTITUENTS.

In voting for the River and Harbor bill Hon. Miles Ross was simply obeying the wishes and commands of his constituents, irrespective of party, officially expressed, as will be seen from the following joint resolution which was passed by the last Legislature, and will be found on page 269 of the laws of 1882:

WHEREAS, There are necessary improvements required in the Delaware river between the city of Trenton and the sea to improve the navigation of said river, and the citizens of New Jersey and Pennsylvania are petitioning Congress to make an appropriation for the same; therefore,

1. Be it resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be requested to use all honorable means to secure such appropriation as shall be necessary for the above purpose.

2. And be it resolved, That after this joint resolution shall have been approved by the Governor, copies of the same shall be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved March 3, 1882.

This resolution was voted on by every member present in both houses of the Legislature on the days when it came up on final passage, and was approved and signed by our Democratic Governor. The following was the vote on the resolution in the two Houses:

Senate—Ayes—Senators Applegate, *Beatty, *Bosenbury, *Ferrell, Gardner, Havens, *Lawrence, *Paxton, Vail, *Wortendyke, Youngblood—14. In the negative, none.

Assembly—Ayes—Messrs. Adair, *Baker, *Bell, *Bond, Brewster, Carter, Coombs, *Fiedler, *Flynn, *Forman, *Fritts, Gaston, Goodwin, Greaves, Griggs, *Heath, Herr, *Hewitt, *Hipp, *Horner, Johnson, Ladow, Lewis, *Lindsley, Locke, *Mathews, *Mc Adoo, *McCague, *McGowan, Mc Murray, Mines, *Moore, Parrott, Parsons, Pennington, Richardson, Robertson, *Ross, *Schomp, Shields, *Shinn, *Sisson, Smith, *Van Bussum, *Van Cleef, Young—46. In the negative, none.

* denotes Democrats.

In view of this official request of the State of New Jersey, irrespective of party, that our Congressional Representatives should vote for this measure, how absurd and unjust appears the howl that has been raised against it.

As to this district, how could Mr. Ross have voted against this measure without insultingly defying the expressed and urgent request of the whole State?—[Adapted from State Gazette.

Republican Methods.

The Flemington Democrat (?) in its efforts to assist the Republican party to gain a Congressman in the Fourth District, has adopted Republican methods. Its first prevarication (to put it mildly) was the statement that a "call to reconvene the convention" that nominated the Hon. Henry S. Harris had been signed by one hundred, when in fact a mere handful of sore-heads and kickers-under-Republican-influence (like Bro. Killgore) expressed such a desire. The latest fabrication is shown up by the following from the Flemington Advertiser, an enterprising, reliable and unbiased organ of the Democratic party in Hunterdon county:

In this week's issue of the Hunterdon Democrat, after taking back what it had said about Mr. Oliver Hall, of East Amwell, it says:

"In our article last week claiming that three more Hunterdon votes were cast for Harris than he was entitled to—although there were more than that number—we should have counted Richard Hall, of Tewksbury, instead of Oliver Hall, of East Amwell. Richard Hall, we are informed, has made affidavit since the convention, that he was neither a delegate nor alternate to the convention. Yet he was hired by the Harris gang to cast a vote in the convention for the jobber Harris. Will anybody say that Dick Hall had a right to cast that vote? If not, our claim that Henry S. Harris was counted in, not nominated, stands unchallenged."

As usual, the editor of the Democrat is mistaken. Mr. Hall writes us as follows:

NEW GERMANTOWN, Oct. 10th, 1882.
Editor of the Democrat-Advertiser:

I notice in this week's Democrat that Mr. Killgore asserts that I was not a delegate to the Newton convention, and that he had been informed that since the convention I had made affidavit that I was neither a delegate nor alternate; and he then says I was hired to vote in the convention for Harris. In all this there is not one word of truth. I was a delegate to the convention; I went from home to vote for Harris; I did vote for Harris, and I am proud of it; I never made an affidavit that I was not a delegate, nor did I ever make any affidavit about this matter; I was not hired to vote for Harris, nor was I offered money to vote for him. Somebody has imposed upon Mr. Killgore, or else he manufactured the story. As a Democrat I desire to have this contradiction published, so that all may know I am not a sore-head.

Respectfully,
RICHARD H. HALL.

Try again, Brother Killgore, and if it isn't officious, we should suggest that in future, before publishing any assertions concerning the delegates to the Newton convention, you at least take the trouble to verify the information. It is unjust and improper to mislead Democratic voters by statements such as have been published of the Messrs. Hall.

* * *

Kellogg the bogus Senator from Louisiana, says he will be elected to the lower House of Congress, by 3,000 majority. The Texas Siftings remarks that if Kellogg is to do the counting himself, it is surprised at his moderation.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS—TEMPERANCE

The following note addressed to the Board of Education, will explain itself:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 16th, 1882.
To The Plainfield Board of Education.

J. KIRKNER, Esq., President:—At a large meeting, including most of the pastors, and many intelligent, influential citizens of Plainfield, held in the first Baptist Church, on Sunday evening, Oct. 15th, for the consideration of the educational aspect of the temperance question, and addressed by Mrs. M. H. Hunt, of Boston, Superintendent of the works of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, in connection with schools and colleges, a proposition was adopted by an almost unanimous rising vote, in favor of the introduction of scientific instruction concerning alcohol and its effect on the human system, in the public schools of Plainfield, (supported by the public money); and also, that due provisions be made therefore by your honorable body.

In behalf of said meeting, I have the honor to communicate to you the action, and permit me also to express the hope that the subject may claim your early, favorable consideration.

I Am, Gentlemen, Very Truly Yours,
A. M. POWELL.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Our Collector has nearly finished delivering the tax bills for this year.

Joel Moffett has broken ground for his new dwelling, corner Mountain and Park avenues.

Samuel Godshalk, of the Westfield Hotel, has been suffering the past week with neuralgia in the head.

Jennie P. Marsh gave a party on the occasion of the eleventh anniversary of her birth, on Wednesday last.

Charles Hannaman intends erecting two cottages on a portion of the homestead farm, situated on Clark avenue, the present Fall.

The early risers were disappointed in getting their morning papers on Wednesday last, owing to the accident to an oil train at Cranford.

The new hotel of Albert W. Moffett in Clark township is rapidly approaching completion. He received a license at the present term of Court to keep an inn and tavern.

Why was not the flag hoisted on Wednesday of last week after the Ohio election? It was on the flag-staff early in the morning after the Maine election, in September last.

Rev. E. H. Bronson, pastor of the Baptist church, was a delegate to the Republican Assembly Convention at Rahway, last Saturday. He was made permanent chairman of the convention.

The many friends of Edward H. Anderson, who formerly resided here when quite young, and now a resident of Tappan, New York State, are ready to congratulate him upon his approaching marriage, which will occur on Oct. 25th, at Mount Hope, New York.

Mugginsville has had no news since the freshet, the main bridge through that locality being washed away, so that one of their prominent streets is impassable. Have patience. The contract is about being given out for a new and substantial structure, by our Freeholder, Mr. Mapes.

On Thursday evening, Oct. 12th inst., the new Congregational church was dedicated. The Rev. Doctor Taylor of the New York Tabernacle delivered the discourse. Addresses were made by Rev. Foster, of Jersey City, Rev. Bradley, of Montclair, N. J., and others. At a meeting of the members of this church about a year ago it was resolved to build a church. The following gentlemen were appointed a building committee: Ludlow V. Clark, Henry Hosford, John S. Irving, Wm. W. Connoly, Henry F. Alpers, John H. Worth, Jas. B. Carbery and George F. Grey, with instructions to have a suitable church erected, the debt not to exceed over two thousand. The gentlemen well and faithfully carried out their instructions. They can point with pride to a handsome church edifice, with sabbath school rooms attached and a large plot of ground artistically laid out, at a cost of over $10,000, and having a debt of but $2,000 upon the same. The congregation have had to mourn the loss of one of the members of the building committee, John H. Worth, Esq. On Sunday last the Sabbath School of this church held their Annual Harvest Home under the Superintendency of Henry Hosford, Esq. The collection of the Sabbath School, for church purposes was $274 74.

ONE year ago the Common Council was holding meetings every week.

WHERE'S the anti-Rose Democrat club that was to "spring up" in this city?

BUCKWHEAT cakes and Jersey sausage will be the next addition to the bill of fare.

MOSQUITOES have not yet left, but both they and their cousins, the flies, are getting weaker.

APPLES are of good quality, but are not so plentiful as was expected earlier in the season.

ON our fourth page will be found the Roll of Honor of the Scotch Plains' Public School for September.

PEOPLE who never before got up so early will brag of their recent smartness long after the comet has left us.

THE chestnut trees are almost broken down with their burden of burs and the worms and nuts will be plentiful and cheap.

IT is reported that the husks of this year's corn cling very tightly to the ear, thus indicating, according to the old rule, a severe Winter.

THE leaves are beginning to turn. Soon the trees will be beautifully adorned, and then will follow the cold, chilly winds of November.

REMEMBER, at 7 o'clock of Monday morning next, the sale of reserved seats for the Y. M. C. A. Course, will commence at Reynold's Pharmacy.

IN another column an ex-Councilman gives his views regarding the granting of the privilege to construct water works in this city, and ventilates his opinion of what will follow.

THE Weather Bureau and Vennor and DeVoe knew nothing of the late rain storm and uttered no warning, but we were told last week to prepare for a cyclone that never arrived.

WHAT a pleasant time we would have at this season of the year, if it were not for the irritating tax notices that come to ruffle us! But that "if" is a very important word, and may be found in every dictionary.

THE Grand Jury on Monday, handed in a batch of indictments and then retired to consider other cases. The charges against ex-Collector Clark and against the Oil-cloth Factory, have not as yet been brought up.

THE Trenton Times an enterprising, interesting and handsome daily, is the latest exchange that we are called upon to welcome to our sanctum. It is independent in character and managed by Lawrence S. Mott, formerly news editor of the Times of Philadelphia.

WE would again most respectfully (but we fear most uselessly) call the attention of "the authorities" to the fact that the corner-loafers still congregate on the Front street side-walk, west of Park avenue, and grossly insult such ladies as are compelled to pass.

WE publish elsewhere the announcement of Y. M. C. A. Sixteenth Annual Course of Entertainments which was reviewed by us in our last issue. The attention of the public is particularly called to the date of sale of reserved seats and the arrangements therefore.

THE Somerville Unionist-Gazette is responsible for the following: "At a meeting of the Y. M. C. A. at Plainfield recently, the question of "How can we best reach young men?" was discussed. It is the same problem that young ladies have been racking to solve for years."

FROM the eagerness which some persons are manifesting to provide themselves with poultry at their neighbor's expense, it might seem that Thanksgiving is at hand. Our residents will do well to see that their outhouses are securely fastened, as the chicken thief is abroad.

THE Fall and Winter opening at Edsall's this week is attracting the attention of hosts of patrons of this popular Dry and Fancy Goods establishment. The ladies quite generally agree that the display of fine goods, especially in the Cloak department, equals all former attempts in this line, in the city.

THE Board of Education on Monday evening last, awarded the sundry contracts for the construction of the new Grammar School building on Fourth street. Messrs Wooliston & Buckle will do the painting, Isaac Melbourn the mason work and Sparks & Hill of Elizabeth are to be the carpenters.

THE Trustees of the Park avenue Baptist church have drawn a line and declined to rent that auditorium for the delivery by Oskey Wilde of his lecture on aestheticism. Whether another place for the purpose will be secured, or the scheme abandoned, remains to be decided. Oh, for an Opera House!

AGAIN has there been a change in the editorial management of the Bound Brook Chronicle—Messrs Porter and Wilson giving up their recently acquired ownership and A. J. Shampanore, Esq., returning to his old place at the helm. We welcome the latter back with sincere wishes for the future success of his weekly.

PLAINFIELD was visited on Monday evening for about the 209th time by a combination of the most wretched talent which in Van Deventer Hall essayed to play Uncle Tom's Cabin to a crowded house. A number of clap-trap artifices were used to redeem the general worthlessness of the performance, but with no such affect.

THIS month it is expected that special efforts will be made in all the Episcopal churches and Sunday schools, in the United States, in response to the action of the General Convention in regard to the creation of a fund of $100,000, "the income of which shall be given and portions of which may be loaned to aid the building of churches."

THE members of the M. E. church on Saturday and Sunday last, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the society with appropriate ceremonies as noticed in last week's CONSTITUTIONALIST. The occasion was most auspicious, and the music undoubtedly the finest ever arranged in this city for the purposes of religious service.

THE comet is on a "bust." It has been discovered that the nucleus had separated into three unequal fragments, the largest being estimated at 15,000 miles in length. The spaces between the fragments of the nucleus are estimated at not less than 2,000 miles. It is said that the nucleus has assumed the form of a strip not less than 24,000 miles in length and 3,000 in breadth.

THE new and elegant residence building on Park avenue for ex-Councilman O. T. Waring is rapidly approaching completion and when finished will reflect great credit upon the taste and ability of the architect, Mr. Chas. H. Smith. This gentleman had already in this city displayed his talent in the way of planning public buildings, while the houses of Mr. George A. Chapman at Central avenue and Eighth street and Mr. Waring evidence Mr Smith's skill as an architect of private residences.

IT is stated that the recent floods sent such a body of fresh water into the oyster beds that the quality has improved. The oysters are becoming fatter and finer flavored.

IT is said that a machine for heeling shoes has been invented in this State. It is an operation which for a long time it was thought impossible to do to any advantage except by hand.

EXCHANGES are discussing the question: "When is it time to stop advertising?" Some pencil-shover, who understands all about it, says that the time to do that is "when you want to stop doing business."

A VOTER is of legal age, and entitled to a vote, on the twenty-first anniversary of his birth. In other words, a man born on the 8th day of November, 1861, can vote, on age, at the next election, November 7th.

MR. M. Vermeule on Front street opposite Somerset has just received a large assortment of Satin de Lyon dolmans, squirrel lined, in all grades and prices. This stock includes the most elegant garments as well as those of less expensive material.

MR. Henry O. Williams, General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., is out of town making a short visit elsewhere. During his absence his assistant, Mr. J. Harry Manning, attends to the duties of the office in a thoroughly satisfactory and courteous manner.

LAST week the types seemed to say that Peck had a lot of old towels among the line he is offering and selling at 25 cents each. The fact is, the stock is all fresh and new and is being bought up so rapidly that unless you hurry you'll miss the chance. Go to Peck's!

MESSRS A. Vanderbeek, E. P. Thorn, L. Manning, I. Ten Eyck, M. M. Thorn, and W. L. Force, left this city on Monday last for a week at Barnegat Bay. As we go to press the amount of duck already slaughtered by the party surpasses any previous successes.

COLLECTOR VanNorstrand of North Plainfield has postponed the sale of property for delinquent taxes that was to have taken place to-day, for four weeks in order to allow everyone another chance to pay up and save their property. The sale is now advertised for Nov. 17th.

MR. David Demarest of this city died suddenly at the residence of his father, P. M. Demarest, Esq., on Thursday morning. The deceased reached home the day before and was seized with sickness that developed into an affection of the heart that caused his sudden death.

A VERY beautiful collection of Italian works of art is to be seen at Laing's Hall this week. They will be sold at auction by T. J. Gillies, the sale continuing every evening. Private sales will be made during the day. Groups, statuettes, vases and the like are comprised in the collection. Lovers of the beautiful should call and examine this elegant stock of goods, even if they do not buy.

Proceedings in Civil Suit.

The papers in the civil suit of the Inhabitants of Plainfield against ex-Collector Clark and Bondsmen Pope and Cole, were handed to the Sheriff on Saturday last, who has since served them. Proceedings will be brought before the Circuit Court at its term beginning in January next.

An Appeal.

The Plainfield Relief Association invites all friends of the poor to make contributions of second-hand clothing of all kinds. The approaching Winter calls for immediate assistance. Gifts of whatever nature, large or small, will be received gladly at any time at the Association Rooms, 45 West Second street.

MRS. A. C. BALDWIN, Sec'y.

Trinity Reformed Church.

The repairs of Trinity Reformed church having been completed, the church will be open for divine service next Sunday, Oct. 22d, morning and evening. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Raymond, will officiate at both services. The organ, which is being built by Midmer, will not be completed for several weeks. The cost of carpeting, frescoing, the new organ and entire repairs, over the amount received from the insurance companies, has been paid by generous friends of the church and no debt therefore remains.

The choir will consist of a quartette composed of Mrs. Chandler, (nee Gaston) soprano; Miss Staats, contralto; Mr. Naylor, tenor, and Mr. Brown, basso.

Coal and Oil Trains in Collision.

There was some delay to the passenger trains of the Central Railroad of New Jersey Wednesday morning, in consequence of a block on the road between Roselle and Cranford, caused by the collision of a coal and oil train during the heavy fog which prevailed at 3 o'clock. Both trains were badly broken up, and the engineer and fireman barely escaped with their lives by jumping. The engineer of the oil train had his tongue nearly cut off; it hung by a mere thread.

Newspaper Man Indicted.

The Grand Jury of Monmouth county came into Court Monday afternoon with indictments against John H. Cook, editor and proprietor of the Register of Red Bank, and Henry Clay and William J. Kellet, two reporters, for libel and conspiracy, in sending to New York newspapers the false statements about the typhoid fever epidemic, which they claimed was raging in Red Bank. These reports greatly injured business in the town, and nearly ruined several of the Summer boarding house proprietors. The three were indicted jointly for conspiracy to ruin the town and again for libel. Separate indictments were also found against each one for libel.

The Political Situation in Somerset.

A correspondent in the Hunterdon County Democrat says: "The political situation in Somerset county well illustrates the idea of a happy family. In order that your readers may understand the situation we give the following facts: The Unionist-Gazette is the acknowledged mouth-piece of the Republican party in Somerset. The property belongs to an Association; the President is C. Stewart Hoffman; the Secretary and Treasurer is A. V. D. Honeyman, who is also the editor in charge. The stockholders are the above named gentleman, Colver Barcalow, the present Sheriff L. A. Thompson, Wm H. Long, and one or two others not so well known.

At the recent delegate meeting for the selection of an Assemblyman, C. Stewart Hoffman was chosen, and for Surrogate Wm. H. Long was nominated for a second term. Nice, is it not?

We can conceive of no arrangement that could be nicer for the interested parties, so long as they can agree; "but when rogues fall out, honest men get their due."

No man outside the ring and ring influence has the smallest chance to have even the smell of offices or the patronage therefrom. There are some who believe that the ring includes a prominent Democrat whose influence extends to the extreme of a control of the opposition organ. Said organ of course will be permitted to gather the crumbs."

The Alerts.

The following is a portion of the just commendation bestowed upon the Alert Hose Co., and its carriage by the press, upon its visit to Morristown last week:

(From the Jersey Iron Era.)

Alert Hose, of Plainfield, a fine body of 24 men, commanded by Foreman Aug. Saltzman and Assistant Col. Julian Scott, and dragging their superb silver-mounted hose carriage, which is one of the very finest in the State.

(From the Morristown Banner.)

The Plainfield Company, with their beautiful parade carriage, was the centre of attraction. The members are a superb lot of men, whose connection with a Fire Department is a credit to any place. We understood that Bro. Force, of the CONSTITUTIONALIST, was with them, and we went slashing around in the mud looking for his rosy countenance, but came to the conclusion that he knew enough to go in and out of the rain, as we did not find him.

(From the Newark Journal.)

Wednesday the Alert Hose Company, No. 1, of Plainfield, under the command of August Saltzman visited Morristown and was given the right of line in the annual parade of the Fire Department of that city. The company was headed by Voss' full band and drum corps. In their suits and elegantly decorated silver carriage, which cost them $7,000 the members made a very handsome appearance, and were hailed with applause all along the line. They were guests of Resolute Company, No. 1 of Morristown and were most hospitably treated. As they passed through our city on their way home last night they were lavish in their praise of the Morristown fire laddies for the welcome they had met.

Baptist Missionary Convention.

The Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of the East New Jersey Association, will hold its Annual Convention in the New Market Baptist church during to-day (Friday). There will be sessions at 10 a. m., and 2 p. m., and the programme of exercises will include the reading of reports and general discussion of methods of work, besides singing, prayer and praise.

Lewis Cochran for State Senator.

The Sussex County Democratic Convention held at Newton on Monday, nominated Lewis Cochran for State Senator, William E. Ross for member of Assembly, and John H. Nelson for County Clerk. Mr. Cochran is the gentleman that the Flemington Democrat (?) endeavored to force upon the people of the Fourth District as their candidate for Congress in place of the Hon. Henry S. Harris whom the delegates elected had nominated.

Middlesex County's Ticket.

The Middlesex county Democratic Convention was held at New Brunswick on Saturday last, and placed in nomination the following: State Senator—James Neilson. County Clerk—Orlando C. Perrine. Surrogate—Clarence M. Slack.

One clause of there solutions adopted is "that this convention heartily endorse the course of Hon. Miles Ross in his devotion to the commercial, manufacturing and agricultural interests of this county and Congressional District."

Shorthand Writing.

We have received a copy of the elements of Takigrafy by the Rev. D. P. Lindsley, of New York. This is an elementary work on what is considered the most complete system of short hand writing—a system adapted to business and literary pursuits, as well as verbatim reporting. We advise young men to look into the subject. A knowledge of the art will be of much use, especially if, as Mr. Lindsley claims, and as multitudes of people have learned it say, the system is so simple as to be readily learned by all, and used in connection with every kind of work.

A Few Words on Smoking.

A gentleman is always mindful of the tastes and feelings of others. If he is fond of a cigar, he indulges in the habit at proper times and places. He never forgets that tobacco smoke is generally offensive and sometimes nauseating to ladies, and therefore he foregoes the indulgence in public. Of course he never smokes a cigarette: that habit is confined to boys and young men of weak stomachs and weaker heads. But he is willing to endure the nuisance because, in the native kindness of his heart, he does not wish to take away a means of livelihood from the poor boys who fish from the gutters the cigar stumps of which cigarettes are made. He never smokes upon car platforms, or puffs into the faces of women and children on steamboats, or elsewhere, or carries anywhere the villainous odor of an expired stump between his fingers.—Ex.

Won't Stand the Cost.

It is now some weeks since the expert employed by Messrs Newell & Wight made his report to those gentlemen and set forth the means of destroying the offensive odors from the Oil-Cloth Factory and the probable cost. In effect the report claimed that only could the desired result be accomplished by the construction of machinery to draw from the boiling and drying rooms all the arising fumes and forcing such into a furnace to be burnt over a cork-fire and thence passed into the air from the mouth of a high chimney. This, the firm was assured, would effectually destroy all objectionable odor. But—and just here the rumored desire of Messrs Newell & Wight to use all means in their power to arrest the fumes, faded away—an expense of about $2,000 was necessary to carry out the plan, and the expert was indirectly convinced that his scheme would not be executed.

In the Cause of Temperance.

In spite of other and unusual attraction for the public during the same time, the First Baptist church was crowded on Sunday evening with an audience gathered to attend the temperance meeting under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., of this city. The occasion was a most interesting one, and much enthusiasm in the cause of temperance was displayed by those present. The principal feature of the evening was an able address by Mrs. M. H. Hunt of Boston, Superintendent of the work of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, Department for the introduction of scientific temperance institution in schools and colleges. Mr. A. M. Powell, Secretary of the National Temperance Society, introduced the speaker after a few words of his own regarding woman's work in the cause. The Rev. Dr. Ketcham opened the meeting with prayer and the Rev. Mr. Manchee closed with a benediction.

Republican Assembly Convention.

The Republican delegates to nominate a member of the Assembly from this District met at Rahway on Saturday last, and the Hon. Frank L. Sheldon was renominated for a third term. The occasion was one of local interest to Plainfield by reason of the efforts used to place in nomination residents of this city—Messrs Joseph B. Miller and George P. Suydam being prominent candidates. Had the usual tactics been adopted it is probable that the nomination would have fallen on a Plainfielder, but the refusal of the Suydam delegates (even before the Convention) to agree that the weaker of the two candidates from this city should withdraw after the first ballot in favor of the stronger, effectually prevented any other result than the renomination of Sheldon. Mr. Miller on the first ballot and thereafter until his name was withdrawn, lead Mr. Suydam in number of votes, and had the latter declined to contest the nomination in view of such fact, it seems possible that Mr. Miller would have been the chosen candidate. As it is, the Republicans of this District have placed themselves on record as the supporters of a worker for the notorious Water-Front Bill.

An Elizabethan Protest.

At Elizabeth on Saturday evening, a citizen's meeting was called by a number of members of the Common Council and property owners to protest against the recent appropriation by the Board of Freeholders of $75,000 for the repair and rebuilding of the county bridges damaged and destroyed by the late flood. The meeting was largely attended and the question ably discussed and considered both for and against the expenditure proposed. Director Martine and Freeholders Clark and Newberry, however, so clearly presented the necessity of the appropriation and explained how thoroughly the question of economy had been considered, that not a fair-minded person present remained unconvinced of the propriety of the Board's action.

The following addressed to the editor of the Elizabeth Journal, we publish in this connection:

MR EDITOR:—By invitation as well as desire, I attended your taxpayer's' meeting Saturday night, and I regret that so few of your thousands of taxpayers were present, for I can assure you it is my wish as well as the desire of all the members of our Board (who are taxpayers also) to arrive at just the proper conclusions on all matters that come under our jurisdiction; those, however, who did attend the gathering were gentlemen of standing, influence and taxpayers, entitled to all due consideration, but one of them gave expression to a theory that is not creditable. It is not right to say because we cannot prosper we will pull down the county, and if the county cannot we will pull down the State, and if the State cannot we will pull down the Republic.

I think the gentlemen who signed that call could have reached the desired end in a much better way by calling upon the Board or the freeholders representing the taxpayers of your city, and I wish to say they are taxpayers themselves and a credit to your people. If they had the good of the taxpayers of the county at heart this was no time to parade a notice to the people of neighboring counties and States that bears upon its face a suspicion that something is wrong in your county affairs. Some of the signers of that call, if not all, knew that within a short time another notice will be before the public soliciting proposals or bids on county bonds at 5 per cent. to the amount of about $100,000 to renew a portion falling due of 7 per cent. This may have an effect on some bidders out of the State; I hope not. I think that the signers of that call owe it particularly to themselves as well as to the best interests of other taxpayers of their city and county, to make some statement to correct the impressions that their hasty action may cause in the direction I have indicated. They owe it to the County Board, and they owe it to their own representatives in particular. Remember, gentlemen, "truth travels slow" when chasing up wrong impressions (which are sometimes worse than untruths) when cast upon the four winds of heaven. Our advertisement on bonds may shortly appear, and we, as taxpayers, don't want anyone intimidated, or any of our good citizens on the bear side of the market, for we always look to some of them for bids. If it is not trespassing too much, I may at some time take up other views of the subject.

Very Respectfully,

C. W. L. MARTINE, Director.

Y. M. C. A.

Report of The General Secretary to The Board of Managers at its meeting held Thursday Evening, Oct. 12th.

The following monthly report of the General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. made to the Board of Directors at their last meeting, was not intended for publication, but the Directors think it will prove of interest to all the members of the Association and they hope to others as well.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN:

The special work of the association in some of its branches has now been commenced, and, I am able to say, is progressing favorably.

From an average attendance in the rooms of twenty three when I came here, the average has increased to fifty-four for the month of September.

The rooms are open daily (Sundays excepted) from 9 a. m. to 9:30 p. m. Visitors are not confined exclusively to the Reading Room, but on most any day or evening are found in all our rooms; some reading, others conversing in the parlor, while still others amuse themselves at the piano in the lecture room, or with the games provided.

Our young men's prayer and song meeting was commenced on Monday evening, Sept. 11th. The night was dark and rainy but eighteen young men came. On the 18th of Sept., thirty-nine were present; on the 25th, another very rainy evening, twenty-five; and, on the 2d of the present month, forty-nine.

Printed topics for each meeting night were distributed to the young men, so that each one might become familiar with the subject for each meeting. The average attendance for this meeting was thirty-three.

We have faith to believe that these meetings have not been held in vain, for evidence has been given that three souls have been saved for Christ, and many are seriously thinking of deciding for the Saviour.

Our every aim and effort is to reach young men and bring them into the fold of Christ and under the influence of the Church. And, while we make this the chief work of the association, we are using secular agencies as a means of accomplishing our aim.

A Glee Club of some sixteen or eighteen male voices has been organized, and, under the leadership of H. O. Newman, is making good head way. They meet as a general thing on Thursday nights. This Club will be able to give us valuable help in our receptions and entertainments.

By permission of the Board, the Gen'l. Secretary commenced arrangements for a Ladies' Auxiliary, and now that society is in existence with about one hundred members, and ready for active work. The officers are:—President, Mrs. Samuel Milliken; Vice-President, Mrs. G. H. Burgess; Secretary, Miss Emma McGee; Treasurer, Miss Clementine Yates.

The ladies think our rooms need a thorough overhauling and refurnishing, and are now at work with plans for doing the same.

Committees on Rooms, Receptions, Boy's Work &c, have been appointed and will consult with our committees of the association concerning their respective work. During the month there have been four special committees in session, and a meeting of the lecture committee.

The committee appointed on the District Conference made all arrangements for the meeting and reception of the delegates; and on the afternoon and evening of Oct. 5th the conference was held here. Some twelve or fifteen delegates were present, and about thirty of our members. The ladies of the Auxiliary gave us their assistance in caring for the wants of the inner man.

The evening service held in the Methodist church was one of great interest and was well attended. What benefit can be derived from such a fraternal meeting in conference I think was clearly demonstrated to all present.

While we have tried to enthuse new vigor into our special branches of work, the outpost meetings have not been neglected, but one new meeting has been started at Washingtonville on Sunday evenings.

These meetings are well attended and are the means of much good to those people who are in the various districts where the meetings are held. Their average attendance is as follows: Sunday-School at Washingtonville, forty. Service at same place, fifty. Service at M't. Pleasant, forty-nine. Service at Jackson, seventeen.

Our work now is but just commenced; something has been done; much remains to be done. Let work accompany our prayers that the Young Men's Christian Association may be an instrument in God's hand for doing much good and we will succeed.

Respectfully Submitted,

HENRY O. WILLIAMS.

Semi-Centennial of Methodism.

The celebration of the fiftieth year of the organization of the Methodist Church of this city and the erection of a Church edifice had for months been looked forward to with the most delightful anticipations. The most thorough preparation had been made, correspondence had been had with former living pastors, and an elaborate programme had been arranged as reviewed in our last issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST. An exchange has the following account: Saturday, Oct. 14th, the day of beginning the services, opened bright and beautiful, and continued without interruption until the close of the exercises on Sunday evening. The original society, consisting of 17 members, was organized in 1832, and a small but neat house of worship was erected the same year. Of the 28 pastors who have served the Church 10 have deceased. Of the surviving 18 9 were present, and participated in the services—I. N. Crane, A. Gilmore, L. R. Dunn, R. Given, E. A. Day, G. H. Whitney, W. Day, I. R. Bryan, and T. H. Stockton, the present pastor. Of the original members there were present Father Coddington, now a resident of Orange. It is not certainly known that any others are living. The present pastor, T. H. Stockton, superintended and conducted the exercises with admirable skill and exceedingly good taste. On Saturday at 3 p. m. occurred a reunion and memorial service, under the conduct of L. R. Dunn, a former pastor, but now presiding elder of the Elizabeth District. This service was participated in chiefly by the former pastors, who gave brief sketches of, and narrated incidents connected with, the deceased pastors. In the evening of Saturday the pastor presented an interesting historical sketch, which evinced diligent research and careful preparation. This was followed by an organ recital, which elicited the highest eulogiums, after which the company repaired to the capacious lecture-room, and spent an hour or more in social intercourse and interchange of salutations.

The Sabbath services opened with a love-feast at 9 a. m., which was largely attended, and was characterized by spirituality and unction.

At 10:30 the pulpit was occupied by C. N. Sims, D.D., Chancellor of Syracuse University. The doctor was in his happiest mood, and charmed the large audience by his his clear logic, his fervent spirit, and his melting pathos.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon there was a family gathering, and, judging from the large attendance, but few members of the family were absent. The services consisted chiefly of reminiscences running back coeval with the history of the church.

At 7 p. m., J. M. King, D. D., of New York, preached a sermon of great beauty and force. The sermon was followed by the celebration of the Lord's-supper, a fitting sequel to the whole. Great credit is due to the organist and the choir for the variety and richness of music, thus imparting a delicious flavor to the entertainment. The occasion was one of special interest in Methodist circles and proved in every respect an eminent success.

It is to be hoped that the church has received a momentum which will send it forward with increased celerity and enlarged usefulness through another period of half a century.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

Plans for a palatial mansion for John F. Wilson, Esq., are under way.

Proposals are asked for by the Town Committee for repairing the roads damaged by the recent flood.

A six-year-old German lad while toddling across Somerset street was run over on Monday afternoon last. Keep your infants off the street.

Our old friend John Berry, Esq., has just had put down a first-rate board walk and also had his residence tastefully painted. His neighbors would profit by doing likewise.

The Democratic voters of North Plainfield township met, per call, at Blatz's Hotel on Saturday afternoon last, Mr. John Bodine, chairman of the last primary called the meeting to order. Charles Matthews, Esq., was elected chairman and Mr. A. L. Force, Sec'y. The following delegates were elected to attend the County Convention at Somerville, on the 19th inst.: George Dezler, Albert L. Force, Adam Fritz, Joseph Blatz, Charles Matthews. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That all Democratic primaries hereafter be held in the evening at a time and place in the discretion of the members of the County Executive Committee from North Plainfield township.

MESSRS EDITORS:—It is hoped that the gentlemen of our common council will further seriously consider, the water work question before they grant the extraordinary privileges asked by the water work company; in addition to water works the sewerage question ought to receive more attention than it has thus far received, and in a different direction. On a previous occasion, through the columns of your paper I endeavored to show what was evidently the purpose of the water work schemes in relation to sewers, paving of streets and flagging of sidewalks. Through a law passed by the last legislature (which should never have been enacted) a bare majority of a quorum of our common council can impose upon the people of Plainfield, sewers, paving of streets, and flagging of sidewalks, and no remonstrance of property owners—according to the law in question—shall be of any avail as the law declares in plain terms that owners along the line of said improvements shall have no voice in determining whether or not such improvements shall be made; but every thing in regard to the matter is left to the judgment of the common council. There can be no doubt but that the sewerage and paving privileges granted to the common council is a hidden part of the scheme of the water work company. Why? Because you will remember the water company propose to serve the city with water, and in said proposition a part of said service is the flushing of gutters, and it naturally follows that before gutters can be "flushed" they must be constructed. How are all these "improvements" to be paid for? Why, by a "capital fund" (as it is called in the law) of $5,000 per year to be put in the general tax levy until the improvements are completed and the balance of the cost to be assessed upon the property benefited, the assessment to remain a first lein thereon until paid. Sewerage, paving of streets and flagging of sidewalks, I repeat, can be imposed upon the property owners of Plainfield by a vote of a majority of a quorum of the common council. The cost of all these improvements bear in mind, (excepting the $5,000 per year capital fund—which is to be a general tax) shall be assessed upon property and remain a first lein thereon until paid. I repeat this because I desire to impress upon the minds of the people to what danger they are exposed.

Our Advice.

For "The Constitutionalist."

I am a family man, small income, six children, live in range of gas house and oil-cloth factory, and my neighbor keeps boarding dogs; my wife (good lady) wants me to join the new Prohibition party: What would you advise?

Truly yours,

NERVE.

[If our correspondent will wait awhile, his wife and the old women that are agitating the "prohibition movement" will discover that prohibition does not and never can prohibit—ED.]

The Accounts of the Board of Education.

We were in receipt of the following on Tuesday last:

To the Editors of the Constitutionalist:

I am requested by the Board of Education to inform you that a full examination of all the accounts of the Board have been made by an accountant for the years 1874 to 1881 inclusive and found correct.

A copy of the same is on file with the Board for examination.

DUTY TO OTHERS.—Chambersburg, July 25th, 1875.—This is to let the people know that I, Anna Maria Krider, wife of Tobias Krider, am now past seventy-four years of age. My health has been very bad for some years past; I was troubled with weakness, bad cough, dyspepsia, great debility and constipation of the bowels. I was so miserable I could hardly eat anything. I heard of Hop Bitters and was resolved to try them. I have only used three bottles, and I feel wonderfully good, well and strong again. My bowels are regular, my appetite good, and cough all gone. I feel so well that I think it my duty to let the people know, as so many know how bad I was, what the medicine has done for me, so they can cure themselves with it. ANNA M. KRIDER, wife of Tobias Krider.

FATHER IS GETTING WELL.—My daughter says: "How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters. He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable, and we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A Lady of Rochester, New York.

The most obstinate cases of Catarrh and Hay Fever are cured by the use of Elys' Cream Balm the only agreeable remedy. Price, 50 cents. Apply to nostrils with little finger.

A GENTLEMAN from Orwell, Pa., called my attention to Elys' Cream Balm as a remedy for Catarrh, Hay Fever, &c. He was so earnest in asserting it to be a positive cure [himself having been cured by it] that I purchased a stock. The Balm has already effected a number of cures. P. F. Havett, M. D. Bordentown, N. HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.

It seems strange that anyone will suffer from the many derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing Scrofula, Syphilitic disorders, Weakness of the Kidneys, Erysipelas, Malaria; all Nervous disorders and Debility, Bilious complaints and all Diseases indicating an impure condition of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Stomach, skin, etc. It corrects indigestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name indicates, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which Sulphur, Sugar of Lead, and Nitrate of Silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Don't be a Clam!

You shouldn't pattern after a Clam. They open their shells, take their food, but the moment anything new appears, they shut up, and will have nothing to do with it. Now, what's the use of being a CLAM! You are suffering with Malaria or Chills and Fever, "Titsworth's Sure Cure for Malaria," may be to you a new idea—within the hard shells of prejudice you say—"I know that nothing seems to help me, I've almost made a Quinine mine of myself, without avail—still ill—shake!" Of course you will, If you will be a Clam! Now, don't be a Clam! Give us a chance to prove to you that "Titsworth's Sure Cure" will positively cure you of Malaria! 40 drops will arrest the disease in 12 hours. Day is no more certain to follow night, than a complete cure is to follow the taking of this Remedy. Don't be a Clam!

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

SHE COULD NOT BACK.

(FROM THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.)

"Back, I say!"

The silvered foam of the sea was plashing in rythmic cadence on the white sands of the beach, while here and there a fleck of wavering light from the signal buoy on Sardine Shoals—that dreaded spot beneath whose treacherous waves so many goodly ships freighted with precious burdens from far Cathay and Muskegon had disappeared forever—brought into bold relief against the western sky Girofle McClosky's off foot, as she stood by Bertram Perkins' side that soft June night.

"You do not love me," said the girl, speaking slowly, "or you could not speak so cruelly. On this beautiful night, when the hills are suffused with amber haze, through which the stars glow and throb in silent splendor, we should think of nought but love—pure, passionless love, that will bind our hearts together in a chain whose every link shall be a kiss; whose every fold a sweet caress."

For an instant the man did not reply. Then the girl stretched forth to him her bare white arms that glistened like marble in the growing dusk, but he heeded them not.

"Will you not speak to me, sweetheart?" she said, with an infinite pathos in the words.

No answer came. Again the outstretched arms pleaded mutely and with pitiful eloquence for the joy that was never to be. Looking at her with a haughty, almost Vice President Davis expression on his face, Bertram again said: "Back, I say."

With a despairing gleam in her darksome eyes, Girofle turned away and began to sob as if her corset would break. "God help me," she said, in despairing accents, "I cannot back."

"Why not?" asked Bertram.

"Because," was the reply, in tear-stained tones, "my polonaise is too eternally tight."

A LITTLE RASCAL.

A boy who had been watching the antics of a couple of lovers through the key-hole, ran down into the kitchen to announce his discovery to his mother. "Oh, it's such fun!" he exclaimed. "What's such fun?" gravely asked, the old lady. "Why, to see sister Mollie and Mr. Fipps play lunatic asylum."

A field of oats was threshed near West Worthington, Minn., this season, that yielded 110 bushels to the acre.

Allegan county (Mich.) farmers must be pretty well-to-do. One of the number is building a barn of black walnut, butternut and whitewood.

It is said they are importing New Jersey mosquitoes into Pennsylvania to bore for oil to head off strikes. This is undoubtedly a pure invention, as the mosquito dislikes to leave his native heath.

"Do tell me what all this talk about free trade and protection means, Henry," said Arminta. "You know I don't know anything at all of these things pa is always talking about and it makes me feel awful silly sometimes when he has Squire Swain and Judge Smith at the house to dinner. I can't do nothing but sit still and play with my fingers, you know." So Henry told her in a sort of chaotic fashion what he knew about the subject that troubled her. Things were getting along finely, if he had only the courage to take advantage of them, but he hadn't until she cuddled up close to him and said, with a sigh, "he believes in free trade, but I am in favor of protection, Henry." Henry ordered a dress suit the very next morning.

THE SIGN FOR TRAMPS.

A Westchester county, New York, farmer, who was much annoyed by tramps went to town a while ago and had half a dozen signs of "Smallpox—Beware!" painted to post upon his house and grounds. Although he had one on either side of his gate, they had not been up two hours when a tramp passed between them and on to the door and asked for food.

"Didn't you see those signs on the gate?" demanded the farmer.

"Yes'r, but I can't read."

The next one said he was near-sighted and thought the sign read "For Sale."

The third had had the small-pox and was willing to nurse the family.

The fourth had been vaccinated and was reckless.

The fifth had a remedy to sell, and the sixth, after getting away with a cold bite, turned to his benefactor and said:

"If you want to beat the boys knock down them signs and put up one reading: 'Help wanted.' Such a sign never fails to keep 'em jogging straight along."

The farmer followed the advice, and he hasn't had a call since.

A conceited man, noted for his lack of good looks, pompously said, "I have three children who are the very image of myself." "How I pity the youngest!" exclaimed a person standing by. "Why is that?" asked the conceited man. "Because it is the one that will probably have to resemble you the longest."

An actor, anxious to secure some applause, and unable to pay for a claque, secured places in the gallery for his nine children, and instructed them carefully as to the moment when they should clap their hands and shout, "Bravo!" The moment arrived at last, and, to his amazement, a chorus of nine called out, "Bravo, papa, bravo!"

In no city in Texas do the clocks and watches vary as much as they do in Austin. The town time differs from the jewelry stores, while railroad time seems to regulate itself. Yesterday afternoon a gentleman with a gripsack in his hand remarked, on hearing the town clock strike three: "Merciful Moses! it is a quarter past four, and now the four o'clock train that I was to go off on left three-quarters of an hour ago."

Mr. and Mrs. Samuelson attended a social gathering on Austin avenue last week, and the conversation turned on hunting jack rabbits. Somebody remarked that at a short distance they resembled small donkeys. Mr. Samuelson, who is a very small man, remarked that he and a number of friends expected to go out and shoot jack rabbits. "No, you are not," said Mrs. Samuelson, "you might get accidentally shot." There was a general smile.

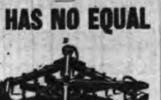
NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE PENN
HARROW
BEST IN THE WORLD
IT HAS NO EQUAL



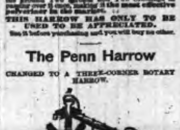
Patented April 18, 1882.

The above cut represents the Penn Harrow complete, with all its combinations of Five Harrows and a sled for each Harrow; and each combination can be made from the Harrow without the least additional expense. By hooking the team to either point, B or C, the center piece revolves and gives the ground Two Strokes and Two Crosscuts in going over it once, making it the most effective pulverizer in the market.

THIS HARROW HAS ONLY TO BE USED TO BE APPRECIATED.

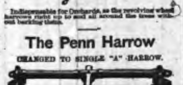
See it before purchasing and you will buy no other.

The Penn Harrow
CHANGED TO A THREE-CORNER ROTARY HARROW.



Indispensable for Orchards, as the revolving wheel harrows right up to and all around the trees without backing them.

The Penn Harrow
CHANGED TO SINGLE "A" HARROW.

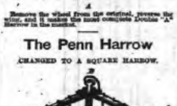


By removing the wing and wheel from the original you have a complete one-horse "A" Harrow.

The Penn Harrow
CHANGED TO DOUBLE "A" HARROW.

Remove the wheel from the original, reverse the wing, and it makes the most complete Double "A" Harrow in the market.

The Penn Harrow
CHANGED TO A SQUARE HARROW.



By removing the wheel from the original you have a Harrow with three points to hook to. By hooking to B or C you can harrow in a furrow, and harrow the bottom and both sides, or over a ridge and harrow the top and both sides, or you can lift either point and have three points on the ground—something that cannot be done with any other Harrow.

The Penn Harrow
ON ITS SLED.

It has always been a great inconvenience to get the Harrow to and from the field. The Penn Harrow obviates this, as no matter which Harrow you wish to use by the combination, it has its own sled to haul it on.

The Penn Harrow
Is made of the best white oak, with steel teeth, well painted, in every way first-class. Formerly a harrow was the most unhandy implement on the farm; with our improvement it is the most complete, and will do double the work of any other harrow and save the farmer half his labor, and is warranted to do all we represent or money refunded. ORDER AT ONCE AND BE CONVINCED.

Price of the Eight Horse Combination Penn Harrow, $30. Send for a Catalogue and see what farmers say.

POETRY.

OCTOBER.

BY HELEN HUNT JACKSON.

O suns and skies and clouds of June,
And flowers of June together,
Ye cannot rival for one hour
October's bright blue weather;

When loud the bumblebee makes haste—
Belated, thriftless vagrant;
And golden-rod is dying fast,
And lanes with grapes are fragrant;

When gentians roll their fringes tight,
To save them for the morning,
And chestnuts fall from satin burrs
Without a sound of warning;

When on the ground the apples lie
In piles like jewels shining
And redder still on old stone walls
Are leaves of woodbine twining;

When all the lovely wayside things
Their white-winged seeds are sowing,
And in the fields still green and fair,
Late after-maths are growing;

When springs run low, and on the brooks
In idle golden freighting,
Bright leaves sink noiseless in the hush
Of woods for Winter waiting;

When comrades seek sweet country haunts,
By twos and twos together,
And count like misers, hour by hour,
October's bright blue weather.

O suns and skies and flowers of June,
Count all your boasts together,
Love loveth best of all the year
October's bright blue weather.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE WHITE POINTER.

The honorable and Rev. Edward Lambert, a clergyman of the Church of England, found that his health was growing infirm, a moral and physical languor seemed to take possession of him; that English melancholy which comes, no one knows why or wherefore, and he could not shake it off. Young, rich, handsome, eloquent, sure of preferment in the church—what was the matter with the honorable and Rev. Edward Lambert.

He did what all Englishmen do when other remedies failed—he crossed the channel.

He thought he would seek the rays of the sun, that luminary so scarce in England. Perhaps it was the sun that he needed.

So one fine day he sailed for France, and soon after found himself at Rouen, where he stayed for some days, taking every morning a walk around the cathedral, carrying a volume of Dante under his arm.

One afternoon he walked up the Mont St. Catherine, and seating himself on the grass, gravely devoted himself to the divine comedy. He had scarcely lost himself in Dante's stately measure when a stranger approached with the most perfect courtesy and addressed him, asking him if he were an Englishman, and, if so, if he would permit a few minutes' conversation.

"I wish to perfect myself in your language," said the stranger, smiling, "and I always seize every opportunity to talk to an Englishman."

"You already speak the language fluently," said Mr. Lambert, politely; "sit down, monsieur."

Resting on the turf with a glorious view before them, the two men soon found themselves talking glibly of the news of the day, of Dante, of religion, politics and the weather. The Frenchman was very agreeable, well educated, and up to the times on all points. He immediately told Mr. Lambert that he was a doctor and practicing his profession at Rouen.

It was natural that the young clergyman should speak to him of his own case, which he did freely, asking the doctor's advice.

The doctor became extremely interested, and upon examination of Mr. Lambert's tongue and pulse, give him a prescription.

They walked together to Rouen, and Mr. Lambert, then noticed that the doctor had a beautiful white dog, a pointer, which gamboled around his master's heels.

They separated as they reached the city, the doctor to go and see his patients, the clergyman to see an apothecary, where he got his prescription prepared.

The next morning the honorable and Rev. Mr. Lambert was better. The doctor's prescription had made him sleep. It had given him strength, he felt an appetite for his breakfast. Months of treatment in London at the hands of the best physicians had not done this for him.

He wished to thank and remunerate the doctor, when he remembered that he did not know his name. Instinct told him, however, that he might meet him again on the Mont St. Catherine. So, with renewed hope, health and energy he walked again to the top of the hill. In five minutes he was joined by the French doctor, and his dog, who came bounding along with his pointer nose in the grass.

The two men greeted each other with smiles and shook hands cordially.

"You have saved my life, doctor," said Mr. Lambert, with unusual enthusiasm.

"Not at all, not at all, my good friend," said the doctor; "I only gave good tonic, which also made you sleep. I found out what none of my English brothers in medicine seemed to have found out, that you have nothing the matter with you. Your system needs a little juggling, that is all. Railroad travel, my dear friend, will soon set you up. Now, I dare say, you have been leading a very sedentry life now, haven't you?"

"It is true, I have."

"Take my advice, travel, ride day and night; take no medicine, excepting these syrups, which I will give you; seek adventure, lead a more varied existence, and, my friend, you are all right."

Now came the delicate question of money, and the Englishman felt for the proverbial guinea.

He tendred it to the French doctor, who laughingly pushed it away, with a very soft well-formed white hand.

"Never, never," said he, "for so light a service; permit me to make my advice a return for a lesson in English conversatin!"

It was gracefully done, and the embarrassed Englishman put his gold back in his pocket.

"Doctor," said he, in a low voice, hesitatingly, "I am an Englishman, and I hate to be under an obligation; you have lifted a load off my heart which has hung there for six months; you have made a new man of me. Now allow me to be of some service to you. I leave here by rail at one o'clock to-morrow morning for Paris; until then I am at your service—and forever after. Can I do anything for you.

The doctor reflected a moment and looked at his dog.

"I don't know, indeed, and yet I do happen to think of one thing. You might save me a journey to Paris, which with my engagements, is now inconvenient. But it is asking too much, perhaps."

"What—how—too much?" said the clergyman.

"Well I have a number of sick people under my charge, whom I treat for diseases of the brain. One of these is a very rich woman, who is slightly deranged. Unhappily she has determined to return to Paris, and I have no authority to detain her. I perceive that she will fret until this caprice is gratified. I must go with her to place her in charge of her friends, and I have been putting off from day to day, because I cannot leave any other patients, the duty of taking her home. Now, if you would escort her it would be a real service," said the doctor.

"My dear sir; a crazy young woman, at one o'clock at night, and I a clergyman of the Church of England!" said Mr. Lambert, forgetting his late gratitude.

"Oh she is forty-six, my dear sir, and her mania is a very quiet one. She looks and acts lake a sheep, poor woman, and she will scarcely speak to a stranger. I do not know that she will go with you. The hour is rather early—one o'clock in the morning—but still I might ask her, and it will be a real favor to me."

"Bring her along, doctor?" said the clergyman, ashamed of his own reluctance; "bring her along—a sheep and forty-six—I will take care of your patient to Paris."

Talking in this way they reached the city. Before separating the doctor gave his card to Mr. Lambert.

"Au revoir," said he, "and perhaps adieu, my dear sir. Let me hear from you from time to time, and I hope, if we never meet again that you will retain, as I shall do, an agreeable recollection of our acquaintance. I may not see you again, as my friend may not be willing to go with you. Adieu."

He read on the card—

"Dr. de La Belle, Rue Antoine, No. 11."

Mr. Lambert walked through the Rue Antoine and stopped at No. 11. It was a large handsome house, with the announcement in black letters on a brass plate, "Dr. de La Belle."

At one o'clock in the morning Mr. Lambert waited with some anxiety in the depot the arrival of the train. Dr. de La Belle had not arrived. The English clergyman rubbed his hands with great satisfaction—for he did not care for this particular responsibility—when some one touched him lightly on the shoulder. It was the doctor.

Seated on a bench was a lady in black, with a veil tightly drawn over her face.

"I have taken a coupe," said the doctor, "so you will not be incommoded by other travelers. Here is mademoiselle's purse, ticket and little traveling satchel; perhaps she will need something. Have the kindness to show her ticket to the conductor. I have telegraphed to her friends who will meet her at the station. She is quiet as a dove. Should you find her agitated, give her a drop of this essence of sugar; here is the bottle. Monsieur Lambert, mademoiselle!"

He then helped along the invalid lady, and put her in the corner of the coupe. He then, after arranging her with great kindness, stepped out, held Mr. Lambert by the hands, and talking with French effusion, as the officials hurried the passengers out and in.

"I trust you will have no trouble; adieu," said he, giving a final word of kindness to his fair patient, and arranging her foot-stool.

"Oh, no! I dare say not," said Mr. Lambert, bowing to the lady and taking his seat by her side. "But what a powerful oder there is in the coupe—will it disturb the lady?"

"Oh, no! I think not!" said Dr. de La Belle; "I broke a bottle of cologne as I was helping her in. It will all disappear in a few moments."

The train departed and Mr. Lambert, who felt exceedingly wide awake, and who found Dr. de La Belle's cologne very strong, tried to draw his fair friend into conversation.

The poor insane woman would not answer a word, and from her immovable calm he concluded that she was fast asleep.

When they arrived at Paris he determined that she should speak.

"Mademoiselle," said he in a loud voice, "do awake and listen to me; I must leave you for a moment to go and find your friends."

No answer.

He sought a long time, but could not find anybody who wanted a lady from Rouen.

He came back to the carriage very discontentedly, when, to his intense astonishment, he found a crowd around the compartment where the lady still sat. He went forward to see what was the cause of the excitement.

"Are you the man that traveled from Rouen in this coupe?" said the policeman.

"Yes."

"Do you know this lady is dead? You have poisoned her with prussic acid. She has been dead four hours." And the populace groaned.

The clergyman was speechless with horror. He tried to clear himself with all the earnestness of an innocent man, but this story was an improbable one. The police found on him the purse of the poor woman and a bottle containing prussic acid.

It was the bottle which Dr. de La Belle had forced upon him in the train.

Mr. Lambert, stunned, half dead, allowed himself to be carried to prison without resistance—he was past that. A day or two later he said:

"Take me to Rouen; I will unmask the villian; he can never face me."

Two sergeants de ville, with other employees of the police, in plain clothes, attended the dangerous criminal to Rouen in the railway car, and drove to the house of Dr. de La Belle. Mr. Lambert was sure that at the sight of his face the assassin doctor would confess all.

Dr. de La Belle was engaged at the moment, and kept them some time waiting. Presently there entered a calm, elderly gentleman, with spectacles, which he removed as he looked at them.

"I beg your pardon for keeping you waiting," said he, "but did you want me? I am Dr. de La Belle."

Mr. Lambert trembled from head to foot. "You are not Dr. de La Belle at all," said the unhappy man.

"I think I can prove that I am," said the suave old doctor, smiling.

Alas, everything was against him. The English clergyman had fallen into the most terrible snare, laid by most accomplished villians.

They returned to Paris.

"I wish I could meet him again with his white dog," said Mr. Lambert, throwing his hands into the air.

"White dog, did you say?" asked the sergeant de ville.

"Yes."

"Ah!"

Some weeks past, and the police became convinced that Mr. Lambert was innocent, but they were yet waiting for the real villian.

Mr. Lambert was taken blindfold, and at the night, to a house, he knew not what street, where he, however, was well lodged, and where he was allowed to read and write, but was strictly watched.

Shortly after his new incarceration, a valet arrived with his clothes, and asked him respectfully to make his toilet. A sergeant escorted him to a close carriage and drove towards the Champs Elysees.

"Look at everybody who passes" said he. Mr. Lambert did as requested, but saw nothing.

The next day the sergeant, elegantly dressed, came again in an open carriage, and by the side of the coachman sat a white pointer dog.

"You have seen that dog before," said the sergeant.

"It is the dog," said Mr. Lambert.

"Keep calm, and look about you" said the policeman.

But they looked in vain. They saw no master for the dog.

"On the night that crime was committed this dog was found in Rouen without a master," said the sergeant de ville.

Later the visitor was requested to make an evening toilet, and was escorted to a grand ball in a magnificent house in the best part of Paris.

"You are serving the ends of justice," said the sergeant to him. "Be patient and observe the guests."

He looked at the guests but saw nothing. Another week passed. He went to another ball in the same company; his young host, Monsieur de F——, seated himself before him and drew carelessly before them the curtains of a large window, which filled half the room.

It was not long before Mr. Lambert heard the well-known voice of the sergeant of police (who in the most irreproachable of black coats and white ties, looked like a Conde or a Montmorenci) talking to a gentleman near him of hunting.

"It's a long time since I've followed the hounds," answered the gentleman.

Mr. Lambert started from his seat. "It is he!" said he. "It is Dr. de La Belle!"

"Be silent!" said Monsieu de F——, "be silent," and he held him in his seat by main force.

In a moment they were joined by the sergeant de ville.

"I have heard him, it is his voice," said Mr. Lambert, trembling all over.

"Perhaps we are still wrong," said that imperturbable individual. "Stay here without moving. I will draw the curtain; look at every one who enters with a lady; when the suspected passes, press my arm without a word."

"Is it Monsieur de Bocage?" asked the host, in a low voice, of the officer.

"Probably," said the policeman; "he was the lover of the unfortunate Blanche Villiers."

At this moment poor Lambert, peeping from behind the curtain, saw the well-known smiling face and jaunty figure of the doctor of Rouen pass with a young lady on his arm. He gripped the arm of the officer.

"It is he," said he, choking. The sergeant de ville drew the curtain quickly. "The chain is complete," said he; "we only wait for the dog. Mr. Lambert, your imprisonment will be short. One more visit and you are free."

The next day a close carriage, with the pointer tied under the seat, called for Mr. Lambert.

"I shall conduct you to his door, but you must enter alone," said the friendly sergeant. "You are not afraid?"

"Afraid," said the Englishman. "I only desire to kill him."

"No, no personal violence, please. You would spoil a pretty job," said the officer. "Coachman, drive to the house of Monsieur de Bocage, avenue Josephine."

When Mr. Lambert, pale as death, rang the bell of the inner door of Monsieur de Bocage, a Parisian swell, just putting on his gloves, opened it himself.

"You wish to see me, sir?" said he.

"Yes, you wretched murderer, I do wish to see you."

Monsieur de Bocage retreated several steps.

"You are mad!" said he.

"I have come to unmask you, villian!"

"You are deceived, my brave gentleman," said M. de Bocage, and, reaching behind him, he caught up a pistol and discharged it full in the face of the Englishman.

At this noise and the fall of the clergyman, who was stunned and blinded for a moment, the two sergeants and several policemen entered the room, accompanied by a white pointer, who leaped up and caressed M. de Bocage.

"Down, Thanor, down," said the murderer, forgetting himself.

"The chain is complete," said the sergeant joyfully.

"Monseur de Bocade, alias Dr. de La Belle, you stand charged with the murder of Mademoiselle Blanche Vilers, in a coupe of the railway which left Reuen at one o'clock at night on the thirteenth inst., a crime which you sought to affix to this gentleman. (Throw a pitcher of water in his face; the ball was extracted this morning, whilst Monsieur de Bocage took his chocolate—he is not hurt)."

So saying, the sergeant revived the Englishman and took Monsieur de Bocage from his luxurious chamber towards twenty years of the galleys. The wretch looked back, "It was you Thanor after all," said he, caressing the white pointer.

"Yes," said the sergeant, encouragingly, "had you but remembered to give the poor thing a pill of strychnine!"

The honorable and reverend Mr. Lambert returned home much better. He had certainly taken the advice of his unknown medical adviser, and had varied his usual life considerably. He never traveled in any coupe again with veiled ladies, nor did he ever quite get over the horror of having traveled from Rouen to Paris with a corpse.

FIXED IN HIS MIND.

Riding up the Columbia pike from Franklin to reach the battle ground, I came across an African resting by the roadside, and after several general inquiries I asked:

"Anybody around here got any relics of the battle?"

"Does you mean cannon-balls, sah?"

"Yes, cannon-balls, pieces of shell, bullets and so forth."

"Well, sah, I has de identical cannon-ball dat killed General Jackson in dis yere foot." "No!" "Deed I has, boss."

"You don't mean that General Jackson was killed here?"

"Dat's 'zactly what I mean, an' I'se got de werry cannon ball dat mashed him. How much will you pay fur a relic?"

I got down and argued with him. I read the list of Generals who fell at Franklin, and then told him how and where Jackson died, but he was as firm as a rock.

"It's no use, boss—no use," he said, as he rose up to go. "You may be right, but somehow I'se got it fixed in my mind fur ten y'ars past dat my cannon ball killed General Jackson, an' if I should start out now wid some odder story I couldn't disrecollect it fifteen minits. Yes, sah, I'll stick to Jackson, an' de price of that ball am two dollahs!"—M. Quad.

THE EDITOR.

An exchange publishes the following notes on the editor and his peculiar likes and dislikes:

The Editor is a member of that race of animals called mankind. He is invariably a kind man.

He is perfectly harmless. You may go into his den without fear. But he has his peculiarities. The sight of a poet makes him wild. He is then very dangerous, and is apt to do bodily harm to all within reach. He is also much wrought up when a man comes in with a little trifle he has just dashed off.

There is one thing that must be said in the editor's dispraise. His mind is so biased by long thinking in a certain direction, that he dislikes very much to look upon both sides of the question. Therefore, if you value your safety, never approach him with manuscript written on both sides of your paper.

The editor usually writes with a pen, but his most cutting articles are the product of the shears.

And let me say right here that a great deal of sheer nonsense has been printed about the editor. He uses his shears when composing an entirely original article.

The editor would make a good public speaker but for his propensity for clipping words.

The editor's hardest task is to dispose of time. His would be a monotonous life, indeed, were it not for the kindness of a few hundred people who call upon him every day, to enliven his dull life with stories of their brand-new enterprises and with antediluvian anecdotes.

When you grow up to be men and women, children, remember this, and spend all the time you can in the sanctum of the editor. He loves company so much, you know, and sometimes he has to sit silent and alone for a whole half minute. Is it not too bad?

The business of the editor is to entertain itinerant lecturers, book canvassers, exchange fiends and other philanthropists. He gives his whole day to them. He writes his editorials at night after he has gone to bed.

The editor is never so happy as when he is writing complimentary notices. For ten cents' worth of presents he will gladly give ten dollars, worth of advertising—all on account of the pleasure it gives him to write, you know, children.

He also loves to write neat little speeches and bright, witty poems for people without brains who wish to speak in public. It is so easy for him to do this that he is sometimes quite miserable when an hour or two passes without an opportunity to do something of the kind.

The editor dines at all the hotels free, he travels free, theatres open wide their doors to him, his tailor clothes him gratis, his butcher and grocer furnish him with food, without money and without price. In short his every want is provided for. He spends his princely salary in building churches and school-houses in foreign lands.

By all means, children be editors. Of course it would be better if you could be hod-carriers or dray horses. But as that is impossible, by all means be editors.

DEMOCRATIC DUTY.

The political sky is brightening for Democracy throughout the length and breadth of the land. The splendid October victory in the heretofore Republican State of Ohio betokens the cheering voice of November elsewhere.

The people are tired of excessive war taxation in time of peace, of extravagant and useless public expenditures, heartless extortioners, hard squeezed wages, official corruption, ring robbers, political assessments, and the dictation of such would be masters as Arthur, Conkling, Cameron and Company.

Thoughtful men who have been voting with the Republican party see the damaging effects of its long continued sway, and by tens of thousands are now severing partisan allegiance and declaring themselves independent.

So it was in Ohio and so it will be in New York, Pennsylvania and other States.

The duty of the Democratic party is plain and concise. It is to sacrifice all personal considerations for the triumph of Jeffersonian principles.

To advocate with uncompromising zeal the re-establishment of Constitutional Supremacy, Equity, Honesty, Economy and Ability in every department of Government.

To insist upon exact justice to each individual American citizen high or low, rich or poor, and the encouragement of every legitimate industry and pursuit, great or small.

Democrats! Fearlessly battle on that line and glorious success awaits you!

Fight with Freedom's weapons for the People!

* * *

Aristocracy is bloated humbuggery, whether inspired by pedigree or money.

* * *

The consolidation of wealth for mercenary purposes is the threatening foe of liberty, justice and law in the United States at the present day.

* * *

The editor who said the Democratic party was dead has been earnestly inquiring about the salubrity of Kamschatka as a place of abode.

* * *

The nomination of Mr. Sheldon for a third term in the House or Assembly is distasteful to many Republicans. The opposition to him in Rahway within his own party is quite outspoken.

* * *

It matters not in this country who one's ancestors and relatives were or are, because to deservingly win popular favor every man must be the architect of his own personal good repute.

* * *

The raising of sufficient revenue, by equitable taxation, to meet the actual indebtedness and economical requirements of government is an incumbent public duty. To go beyond that is to create dangerous temptation.

* * *

The efficient manner in which County Clerk Vosseller has discharged the responsible duties of that office is attested by fact that a very large portion of his political opponents announce their determination to join with the Democrats in voting for him. His re-election should be unanimous.

Vote for VOSSELLER.

Scores of Republicans declare their intention of supporting Surrogate Gerber for re-election, because of the invariable courtesy and prompt business fidelity extended to all persons, and they count a legion, with whom he has held official intercourse. That is the sure test of worthiness. His nomination does the Democratic party honor.

Vote for GERBER.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, an out and out Republican journal, now openly admits that the counting in of Hayes over President-elect Tilden by the Electoral Commission was a premeditated cheat. The Congressional record of 1877 accords to Hon. Miles Ross the grand distinction of having voted NO when that fraudulent scheme passed the House of Representatives.

Vote for ROSS.

One of the Republican organs heaps harsh and unmerited censure upon our fellow citizen, O. B. Leonard, Esq., because he declines to become a candidate for County Clerk. We are credibly informed that Mr. Leonard never authorized the Convention to use his name in connection with that nomination, and if he enjoys any personal privileges the refusal to run for a public office is certainly among them. He is a worthy and intelligent gentleman and knows his own affairs better than party managers can teach him.

SOMERSET COUNTY'S NOMINEES.

The delegates assembled at the Democratic Convention held at Somerville during Thursday afternoon of last week, followed out the example set by preceding Democratic Conventions in nominating candidates that by their personal integrity and fitness for the offices, appeal to the suffrages of the lovers of good government.

HENRY P. CORTELYOU, the candidate for Assemblyman, is as the Somerset Messenger puts it, "the worthy son of an honored sire." He is a farmer of about 55 years of age and probably the most popular resident of Franklin Township. He has twice been chosen one of the Board of Freeholders, being elected in spite of the large Republican majority in the Township. He will use none but lawful means to secure his election to the Assembly, but such a result is sure to be the verdict of a majority of the voters of the district on Nov. 7th.

LEWIS M. CODINGTON, the candidate for Surrogate, is a son of ex-Sheriff Thomas Codington, of Warren Township. He is but 34 years of age, although having served as Deputy Sheriff and Clerk, and for the past eighteen months in the office of the Surrogate. His knowledge of the duties of the office for which he has been nominated, is acknowledged by all, and he will undoubtedly receive not only the united support of his own party but also that of all those independent voters who desire to accomplish the election of the candidate most fitted for the office.

A JERSEY WILLIAM PENN DEED.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger writes: "Upon going to Mount Holly, this morning, I saw Judge Joel Parker (formerly Governor), who is now holding court there. He was reading the Ledger, and read me the article in this day's issue, about an old deed dated March 2d, 1676, signed by William Penn, Gawen Laurie, Nicholas Lucas and E. Byllinge. In your article mention is made of two deeds dated March 1st, 1676. Judge Parker has one of these deeds. It is signed by all the above named grantors to William Poathy, who was a creditor of Byllynge, for a one-nineteenth part of West Jersey. Judge Parker values this deed highly. He sent it to the Centennial exhibition in Philadelphia, in 1876. He says there were more than two of these deeds given on 1st of March, 1676. He saw two besides his own the Centenial year or the year before, at the tea parties in West Jersey, at Millville and Bridgeton. Judge Parker thus, it appears, has the oldest deed signed by William Penn. He found it among his father's papers many years ago."

The Ohio Republicans thought they had securely fixed things by cutting and carving the Congressional Districts in that State so as to defeat nearly all the Democratic candidates. An indignant people, however, decreed honestly and completely turned the tables, thereby inculcating the truthfulness of the old Scottish verse—"The best lai' schemes of mice and men (Sherman and Foster) gang aft a-glee."

* * *

The Republican Executive Committee of Union County, on Wednesday, filled the vacancy on the ticket caused by the withdrawal of Mr. O. B. Leonard by nominating Wm. Cranston, Esq., of Summit, a lawyer doing business in Hoboken, as the candidate for County Clerk. It is said that this gentleman states his expectation of defeat, and only accepted the nomination to show his strength in his own Township.

* * *

The Reverend gentleman, fresh from a Prohibition conclave at Asbury Park and full of its sentiment, who presided over the recent Republican Convention at Rahway, ought to look after doings of his party. Report declares that his candidate for Congress, possibly aided by other moral nominees, on that occasion made glasses jingle lively in a neighboring saloon, as the boys were set up to take something and eloquently warned against the terrible Democratic drink habit.

Four years ago last Spring a Washington, Warren county, lady, picked up a peach stone which had laid out during the winter, and on cracking it, found that it contained two pits, which she took and planted, one on one side of the path in her yard and one on the other. This year the two trees, from those pits taken from one stone, bore fruit, the one a yellow peach and the other a white one.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

John R. Barcalow has charge of building a bridge at junction of Boulevard and Central Avenue.

Aaron B. Clark received the contract for stone work of bridge on Road Dis. No. 4, near H. J. Holmes.

Luther Martin has the contract for building a bridge on Road Dist. No. 11, near the residence of C. B. Ripley, Esq.

Theodore Starr has sold out the milk route he recently bought of George N. Scudder, to James H. Holmes, son of Henry J. Holmes.

John L. Roulston exchanged his fine bay mare, on Saturday last, for a team of working mules. "Johnnie" is always ready for a "swap."

The Rev. N. Cadwell, of the Presbyterian Church, exchanged pulpits on Sunday last with the Rev. H. J. Neill, of the Congregational Church.

The Rev. Dr. Freeman, of Plainfield, delivered a discourse in the Methodist Church on Sunday last, and addressed the Sabbath School in the afternoon.

The record of vital statistics of Westfield township for month of September, shows three deaths and three births; for the corresponding month last year it was four deaths and one birth.

There is very little political excitement in town as yet. Our Republican friends have been urging our present Town Clerk, Luther M. Whitaker, to accept the position on their ticket for County Clerk, in place of O. B. Leonard, who has declined, but Luther don't see it. He is too good a man to be "snowed under."

On Thursday evening of last week the Baptist church and sunday school room was filled with the residents of our town; the occasion being the marriage of Miss Eliza Rick to Mr. Jessie Eatman of Cranford. Mr. Jerry Graham and Miss Maria Wright of Cranford acting as groomsman and bridesmaid. The ushers were Mr. Samuel Kelsey and Mr. Theo. Williams of Westfield. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. H. Bronson, pastor of the church. The bride was dressed in figured satin of old-gold tint, with wreath of orange blossoms and a bridal vail. After the ceremony the bride and groom with their friends went to Cranford to the residence of Mr Joshua Bryant, where the bridal supper had been prepared for them with all the delicacies of the season. They left Cranford on the midnight train; enroute for Philadelphia and Baltimore.

On Saturday last, Samuel B. Hedden, Henry Krouse of Linden, Jas. B. Lambert of Fanwood Geo. L. Headly of Union, Jotham Osborn of New Providence, the surveyors of the highway appointed by the Cout of Common Pleas, of Union County, on Oct. 4th inst., for the purpose of viewing and laying out, if necessary, two public roads in our town, the same being the extension of Kimball avenue and Orchard street, from Elm to Prospect street, met according to the appointment of the court, at the hotel in our town and organized by the election of Samuel B. Hedden as chairman and Henry Krouse as Secretary. David Pierson, one of the surveyors appointed by the court, failed to put in an appearance. After the organization, the surveyors adjourned to view the line of the proposed new roads. After inspecting the lands they met again at the hotel. After listening to the arguments of Frank Bergen, Esq., of Elizabeth, attorney for the applicants and of James C. Bolton, Esq., formerly a resident of our town, in opposition to the laying of the roads, the surveyors decided to lay both roads, and after getting partially through their assessments for benefits and damages, it was getting so late they found they could not finish the report and adjourned to meet again at the Westfield hotel on Saturday next at 10 a. m., for the purpose of completing their labors.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

Governor Ludlow has appointed Prosecutor of the Pleas Jenkins to be Fish Commissioner for the Southern district of the State, to succeed the late Dr. Benj. P. Howard, of Woodbury.

A large number of wild ducks have recently been killed by local sportsmen in the mill pond at New Brooklyn.

There is great excitement at Rahway because of a sacrilege which was discovered one morning in Father McCloskey's Church. The edifice was entered at an early hour by ruffians, who stole the silver candlesticks, chalices, crucifix and other valuables, bent and broke the brass candelabra and other altar pieces, cut the surplice, stole, chasuble and other vestments of the officiating priests and defiled the altar. The perpetrators of the outrage are unknown.—Elizabeth Journal.

The Republicans in Congressman Perry Belmont's district have decided that it is not expedient to nominate a candidate against him, but that any Republican can vote against Mr. Belmont if he can find any one to vote for.

TO THE CITIZENS OF PLAINFIELD.

The subscriber having taken the market heretofore occupied by Mr. I. D. Ten Eyck, has arranged with Mr. John Taylor, proprietor of the extensive pork and beef packing establishment at Trenton, for a constant supply of his products, and will dispose of the same at retail for CASH, at prices that are fair between man and man. Of course our prices will be very much lower than the scale now prevailing. We can afford to sell cheap for many reasons. First—we expect to sell a very large quantity; next we pay cash and sell for cash; we have no bad debts to make good out of each buyer; our expense is small; we keep no men and wagons to solicit orders; at the same time we will deliver all orders promptly. We shall have beef as good as the market affords and also some of ordinary quality, and the price will be but slightly different. So now if there is any desire to reduce the cost of living in Plainfield, give us the proper encouragement and we will give it to you at all times just as low as a large cash business, prudently managed, will afford. Read the price list and compare it with what you have been paying. All sorts of pork stuff is high but will soon be much lower.
Respectfully,
N.J. RANDOLPH.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

EDSALL'S

Our New Department which we advertised last week, consisting of Cloth Coats, Jackets, Fur Lined Silk Circulars, Dolmans, Ulsters, Raglans, etc., proved a very successful acquisition to our already attractive assortment of desirable goods. Many of our lady patrons were free in their expressions of admiration in the elegant display that was made of fine and beautiful garments, and all agreed that our prices were not only as low as they had seen them elsewhere, but were really much lower than any that had been shown them. The weather during our opening was very unfavorable to trade in this line of goods, and yet our sales exceeded our most sanguine expectations, especially in the more costly garments. The Satin Cicilian Raglans at $87 were among the first that were sold, and was considered one of the greatest bargains we offered; others at a less price were equally admired, and a most gratifying proof to us of the sincerity of their admiration was that in many cases the admirers took the garments home with them, and left us the price for the same. We shall keep this department well supplied with the most fashionable and attractive goods in the market, and will guarantee the price of every garment to be as low as the lowest, regardless of where it may come from.

If we sell a cloak and it proves unsatisfactory in any respect we will refund the money to the purchaser on their request so to do.

In each of our other departments we are prepared to offer special inducements, especially in Ladies' and Gents' Merino Underwear and Hosiery, also in Laces, Fichus, Fancy Goods and Notions of all kinds. In the new price list we published last week will be found many inducements to purchase of us, as we have revised the prices of many articles, and we feel confident that none can undersell us. If you have not received one you can be supplied on application at our store.

MR. Samuel Drier has recently purchased of the First National Bank the valuable property on Front street known as the "Giles property" now occupied by Mr. H. J. Barnes as a painter's supply store. Mr. Drier will shortly refit and open the same as a clothing store.

THE Socialist Church, which is to erect a building in Myrtle avenue, near Myrtle street, Brooklyn, holds services on the premises every Sunday, and for every five cents contributed to the church a check good for a glass of beer, and redeemable upon the premises, is given.

SUNDAY was the opening day of the Trinity Reformed church since its renovation, and large congregations attended both the morning and evening services. The pastor occupied the pulpit, and the quartette we mentioned last week, with Mr. Titsworth as organist, occupied the choir gallery.

ONE of the bloodhounds belonging to Anthony & Ellis's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Combination, that visited this city recently, slipped his collar at Newark on Monday and attacked the trick donkey, chewing one ear off and biting a large piece out of his throat, from the effects of which he died.

As a Philadelphia family were eating breakfast the other day, the wife uttered, "Bi." The husband jumped up, grabbed his hat and bolted out of doors. The good wife was merely going to say Bi-Centennial, but the husband thought she was going to ask again, for the five hundredth time, "Buy me a new bonnet."

THE very handsome boulevard lamp presented by ex-Mayor John H. Evans, has been erected at the junction of Broadway, Crescent avenue and Seventh street opposite the Presbyterian Church. The post is of cast iron beautifully ornamented, surmounted by five lamps, and besides its usefulness when lighted the effect of the whole is decidedly attractive.

IT being impossible to secure a church for the appearance of Oscar Wilde before a Plainfield audience, that, conspicuous aes-thete will not favor us with his presence. However, if he's not too old to travel, he may visit this city when the Opera House is completed and lecture on the "Boreness of the Present," or the "Whichness of the What."

QUITE a compliment was paid the Crescent avenue choir in choosing the vocalist that are to sing at the Anniversary of the Ladies' Relief Association, next Tuesday evening. MANY and vain have been the attempts to see the comet during the early mornings of the past two weeks, but cloudy horizons and hazy skies have prevented. Eighty-two severe colds-in-the-head were, however, attained by as many of the day-break-gazers.

MR. Wm. Addis, the Sanitary Plumber, has associated with himself in business Mr. Wm. T. Hassard a thoroughly competent and experienced man in the construction, repair and putting up of furnaces, ranges and stoves. The addition of this other branch of Mr. Addis' already extensive business, will in no way interfere with the usual promptness with which all orders are completed.

AN audience of about 700 attended Dr. Potter's photographic-illustrative lecture on Egypt and Scenes from the Land of the Late War, at the Park avenue Baptist church, during Thursday evening of last week. The occasion was most interesting and instructive, and it is pleasant to record that the Netherwood Sunday School reaps quite a financial benefit from the entertainment's success.

EVONA is the birth-place of an interesting and enterprising journal called A New Friend, devoted to the benefit of Plainfield's little suburb and the completion of the church edifice in course of erection at that place. Its first number is favored with quite an extensive advertising patronage that seems to promise the success which its venturesome publishers assuredly deserve. It will be issued occasionally.

THE honor of securing the first seat for the Y. M. C. A. Course successively and successfully during past years has been attained by Mr. David J. Boice. On Monday, however, Messrs O. T. Roberts and W. M. McGee accomplished the more or less enterprising feat of sitting up all night and thereby getting ahead of the older enthusiast. There were a hundred or more others, however, that procured as good seats without losing their usual sleep.

A YOUNG lady in Dakota has lately advertised for a husband in this exceedingly practical fashion: "I mean business. If there is any young man in this county that has as much sand in him as a pound of plug tobacco, I want to hear from him. I have a tree claim and homestead, am a good cook and not afraid of work, and willing to do my part. If any man with a like amount of land, and decent face and carcass, wants a good wife, I can fill the bill."

MR. N. J. RANDOLPH in our advertising columns to-day, announces that he has taken the market recently occupied by I. D. Ten Eyck which he will stock with all kinds of fresh and cured meats from the extensive beef and pork-packing establishment of John Taylor, at Trenton. Mr. Randolph is thus able to sell at prices, for cash only, far below any other dealer in the city, and merely asks the public to compare his figures with what they have been paying.

WITH pleasure we call attention to the Fall Catalogue of Messrs Hiram Sibley & Co., the Rochester florists. It is especially full and complete in the list of varieties of bulbs offered, and the instructions for culture have been prepared with special reference to the requirements of amateurs, by a distinguished horticulturist. The bulbs offered this year were grown by a Holland bulb grower of over 50 years experience, and is undoubtedly one of the finest stocks ever imported.

In another column will be noticed the advertisement of Meyer Bros., of Nos. 771 and 773 Broad street, Newark, who offer a large line and fine stock of dry and fancy goods, ladies' misses' and children's suits and many other articles at remarkably low prices. This establishment is situated but a block above the depot of the Central Railroad and thus easily reached by Plainfield customers. Mr. Walter Shotwell, formerly of this city, is connected with the establishment and will be glad to welcome his old friends and new patrons.

THE Committee on Bridges of the Union and Middlesex Counties' Boards of Freeholders, met at Miller's Hotel, this city, on Tuesday last, and adopted plans and specifications for the stone work for the proposed new iron bridge over Green Brook at Grove street. The plans are to be seen at the above hotel until Friday next at half-past two o'clock. Bids will also be received the same day for the iron work of the structure, as well as for proposed new bridges over Cedar Brook at Broadway and Park avenue and Grand avenue over Green Brook.

Church Fair.

The ladies of St. Joseph's R. C. Church, of North Plainfield, will hold a Grand Fair at Van Deventer Hall during the afternoons and evenings of Nov. 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th. A large number of useful and ornamental articles will be offered for sale, and among other attractive features $100 in gold will be raffled for.

Killed on the Rail.

Last Friday evening, just after 7 o'clock, as engine 82 on her west bound trip took the slack of her train as it was crossing the William street bridge, the Conductor, Mr. Peter Crotsley, of Flemington, lost his balance and fell from the caboose upon which he was standing. He landed upon the track and is supposed to have lain there insensible until both the 7:38 and 7:49 trains came along and ran over him, mashing him up in a shocking manner. He leaves a widow and six children. His age was about 42 years.

The First of the Course.

At the M. E. church on Thursday evening next, the first of the Y. M. C. A. Course of Entertainments will take place consisting of a combination of varied talents in a programme particularly attractive. Camilla Urso's reputation as a violinist is world-wide, and this lady's efforts with the vocal abilities of Miss Emily Spader and Miss Marguerite Hall, and the piano performances of Mr. S. Liebling, will unite in a concert of extraordinary interest. The elocutionary powers of Mr. A. P. Burbank will intersperse the whole with features especially acceptable.

Incendiarism Again.

The fire-alarm bell at about 8:30 p. m. of Thursday of last week, called out the different apparatus of the Department to extinguish a fire reflected on the sky in the direction of Short Hills. After a good deal of exercise in the way of the hardest kind of pulling over muddy roads, the "boys" were ordered back and the fire left to burn itself out. The building consumed was an unoccupied dwelling on Woodland avenue, just off of Broadway. It was owned by Mr. Aaron Jimmerson and so far as known, insured. The fire was undoubtedly started by an incendiary, and in the absence of a water supply near it could not have been arrested even had the Department gone to the spot.

Personalia.

Mr. Anthony Killgore, formerly of this city, is at present engaged in a business way at his late drug-store on Front street.

Charles F. Stillman M. D., has been appointed Adjunct Professor of Orthopedic Surgery in the New York Polyclinic.

Wm. P. Smith Esq., of La Grande avenue, Netherwood, has been ill for some time past and is still confined to the house.

Mr. Jos. W. Symons and family of Forestdale Vt., have recently been visiting relatives and friends in this city—their former home.

Mr. Noah Webster Pike of this city has been appointed resident agent for the Boston Electric Co's portable lamp which it is claimed will burn for three months at the small expense of nine cents. Parties desiring these lamps for use in their houses or places of business, should apply at once as orders are being received greatly in excess of their manufacture.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The young men's Prayer meeting, Monday night, was very earnest and well attended. The meeting for next Monday evening will be held by Mr. H. O. Williams, the topic being "How shall I treat my enemies." Matt. 5:44-48; 1 Pet. 2:23. Printed topics will be given by the Secretary to those desiring them.

Prof. Worman's class in German will meet in the rooms to-morrow night. This class is making rapid progress and under the instruction given will soon be able to converse fluently.

The Secretary will conduct a Bible class for young men on Saturday evening, Nov. 4th. All young men are cordially invited to attend.

Next Tuesday evening, the anniversary of the Plainfield Relief Association will be held in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, commencing at 8 o'clock. A history of the past year's work will be given in the reports presented by the officers of the different branches of the Association, and an entertaining address will be given by Hon. Wm. N. Ashman, of Philadelphia, who has made the question of dispensing public charities a special study. He is an attractive and racy speaker. A choir of selected voices has been secured for the occasion, and good music will be a feature of the evening's exercises.

The Democratic Primary.

At the Headquarters of the Democratic Association on Wednesday evening, the voters met to elect twelve delegates to the Assembly Convention at Rahway to-day. President Jas. E. Martine called the meeting to order, and Secretary L. F. Wadsworth read the call as published. The following were then nominated: Messrs. Fred. Caspar, V. L. Frazee, John Hafferty, L. F. Wadsworth, Thos. Clasey, C. S. A. Davis, W. B. Maxson, J. Linbarger, P. Muldoon, J. A. Demarest, Michael Fields, Stephen Davis. No other nominations being made, on motion the President cast the ballot electing the above. After interesting speeches by ex-Mayor Nathan Harper, James E. Martine and L. F. Wadsworth, the meeting adjourned.

The Somerset County Convention.

The delegates to the Somerset County Democratic Convention met at the Court House in Somerville on Thursday, Oct. 19, at 11 a. m., and were called to order by Geo. E. Pace, Chairman of the last convention. Mr. Charles Matthews of North Plainfield was nominated for Chairman, and unanimously chosen. On taking his seat he thanked the convention for honoring him, and called attention to advantages that would result to the Democratic party if it availed itself of opportunities at this time open to it in the State and Nation, if the party would present candidates who would command the confidence of the people at large. They must be men of personal honesty and political integrity.

The next business was the selection of a Secretary, and Geo. E. Pace was chosen.

On motion the Chairman named the usual committees.

The townships were then called for nominations and the following were named; For Assembly, Wm. A. Schomp, H. M. T. Beekman and H. P. Cortelyou. For Surrogate, Wm. Ross, Jr., W. S. Potter, Wm. V. Steele, A. F. Voorhees, Geo. W. Vroom, A. T. Huff and L. M. Codington.

A motion that the nominations remain open until the afternoon session was carried, and the convention adjourned to 2 p. m.

The delegates reassembled at 2:10 p. m. Reports of committees were called for, when

The Committee on Credentials reported no contests.

The Committee on Organization reported in favor of making the temporary officers permanent ones. Report Adopted.

The Committee on Rules reported the following which were adopted:

The Com. on Rules report the following rules to govern this convention:

I. A majority of the whole convention of 45 votes shall be necessary to nominate a candidate.

II. After the 3rd ballot the lowest candidate shall be dropped; and on each succeeding ballot the lowest candidate shall be dropped.

The Committee on Resolutions presented the following:

The Democratic party of the county of Somerset, through its representatives in convention assembled, adopt the following resolutions:

I. That we are in favor of a free ballot, unbiased by any consideration, except the choice of candidates.

II. That we pledge ourselves to the enforcement of the statute against the bribery of voters at elections, and we urge our County Executive Committee to offer rewards at every polling place in the county for the procurement of evidence which will show any violation of that statute by any person.

III. That we are in favor of honest and economical State, County and Township government, and the lessening of taxation by which the burdens upon the people will be made lighter.

IV. That we denounce the interference of corporations or individuals outside of our county, in any manner attempting to dictate county nominations either for Legislature or other offices.

V. That we oppose all interference by the National administration, in selection of candidates for State officers, and we commend all good citizens in resisting any encroachment upon their prerogative in that regard, particularly referring to the action of the Independent voters of the State of New York.

VI. That we denounce all bossism; and any party thus ruled should be overthrown.

VII. That we condemn political assessments for the furtherance of any party in power.

VIII. That we approve of the principles of civil service reform, capacity being more essential than mere political preferment.

IX. That we favor all home industries and all legislation tending to improve the condition of the agricultural and mechanical classes.

The resolutions were adopted.

The Chair then stated that further nominations were now in order. A. S. Williamson of Bridgewater was nominated for Surrogate. North Plainfield withdrew the name of Wm. A. Schomp for Assembly, and the names of R. H. Brokaw and C. D. Thomas were added to the Assembly list. On motion the Chair appointed as Tellers, A. Hummer and D. H. Disborough.

The balloting for Surrogate then began. Seven ballots were taken, as below:

	1st.	2d.	3d.	4th.	5th.	6th.	7th.

*Withdrawn. Whole number, 45. Necessary to a choice, 23.

On motion the nomination of Mr. Codington was made unanimous.

The first ballot for Assemblyman was as follows: Cortelyou 21, Beekman 14, Brokaw 1, Thomas 6, Blank 3.

A second ballot decided the contest, thus: Cortelyou 24, Beekman 17, Thomas 4. (It will be seen that 46 votes were cast in this ballot, but taking the superfluous vote from the highest candidate still left him the required number—23.)

A Branchburg delegate moved to make the vote unanimous. Carried.

Messrs. Veghte and Scully were appointed a committee to bring the candidates before the convention. While the committee were absent a motion was made that this convention indorse the nomination of Hon. Henry S. Harris for Congress. Adopted by a rising vote, followed by cheers.

It was moved that the Chairman appoint a County Executive Committee. Carried.

The Assembly nominee now appeared with the committee, and was presented to the presiding officer, and by the latter to the convention. Mr. Cortelyou made a capital speech, though a brief one. He said he felt somewhat embarrassed, as he was not a public speaker. He could not express his sense of gratitude for the nomination, which he accepted. The feeling was sincere and heartfelt. He would use all lawful means to secure his own election and that of the whole ticket. But there must be union in the party; divided we are defeated. His remarks were received with applause.

Jas. J. Bergen, Esq., was called for and made a short address, urging the party to get out the full vote.

The convention then adjourned. It was one of the most harmonious assemblages that has ever met here, and its business was transacted in a decorous manner.—Messenger.

A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

WHAT IT DID FOR AN OLD LADY.—Coshocton Station, N. Y., Dec. 28, '78. Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case a lady over seventy years had been sick for years, and for ten years had not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail. I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbors, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use. W. B. HATHAWAY, Agent United States Express Co.

DELEVAN, Wis., Sept. 24, '78. Gents—I have taken quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 30. I see a great many that need such a medicine. D. BOYCE.

You shouldn't pattern after a Clam. They open their shells, take their food, but the moment anything new appears, they shut up, and will have nothing to do with it. Now, what's the use of being a CLAM! You are suffering with Malaria or Chills and Fever, "Titsworth's Sure Cure for Malaria," may be to you a new idea—within the hard shells of prejudice you say—"I know that nothing seems to help me. I've almost made a Quinine mine of myself, without avail—still ill—shake!"

Of course you will, If you will be a Clam! Now, don't be a Clam! Give us a chance to prove to you that "Titsworth's Sure Cure" will positively cure you of Malaria! 40 drops will arrest the disease in 12 hours. DOROTHY'S MUSIC BOX.

The wind howled riotously about the big old house at Sternaway Grove, and the air was full of feathery white snow flakes which whirled in the maddest, merriest waltz, here and there, until at last they fell softly to the white earth.

The wide sitting room was as cosey as might be—a jolly fire sending long red tongues up the black-throated chimney, the easy chairs standing invitingly about the apartment, and a large, motherly-looking gray cat on the hearth-rug nursing three small kittens.

Dorothy, dimple-checked, brown-eyed, brown-haired, was at the piano playing the "Blue Alsatian Waltz," with a good deal of expression.

Her canary, a bit of vivid lemon color, in his cage at a front window, twittered and trilled sympathetically, and directly underneath the cage stood Tom Sloan, hands in his pockets, his bold gray eyes staring out of the window at the storm, and his handsome lips puckered under his long, blonde moustache, as he whistled a clear, flute-like accompaniment to Dorothy's music.

Tom was half-brother to Sternaway, Dorothy's brother-in-law.

When Hattie Benson had accepted Carroll Sternaway's proposal, it was with the understanding that her younger sister Dorothy—then at school—should have a home at Sternaway Grove.

Therefore Dorothy had been there ever since leaving school, six months before; and Tom Sloan, whose law office was in the city, and who made his home at his brother's also, had all the while made persistent love to Dorothy, while Dorothy had just as persistently hated him.

Tom never seemed in the least upset by Dorothy's apparent dislike, however.

Indeed, Dorothy had never seen him flustered over anything; that was what irritated her—his cool, sleepy, satisfied way—she felt sometimes as if it would be a positive relief to give him a good shaking.

"Dollie," he said, coming leisurely across the room as the music ceased, "when are we to be married?"

Dollie elevated her nose and her eyebrows simultaneously, and maintained a scornful silence.

"Because, you see," he went on imperturbably, "there are always so many preparations to be made for such an event, and so far as I can see, you haven't done the first thing."

"You are the most absurd man I ever knew!" Dorothy cried out at last, a little irrepressible laugh bursting from her lips. "As if I'd be seen marrying such a bundle of laziness and egotism as you are!"

"You might do worse," he replied. "There is but one man about here that I consider a better match than myself, and that man is Fred Raymond on the hill."

Dorothy smiled, while her white fingers chased one another up and down the key board.

"I am to attend church at the east village with the Raymonds next Sunday," she announced triumphantly.

A curious shadow gathered in the man's keen eyes as he scanned the girl's fresh face.

He took the dimpled chin between his thumb and forefinger, and forced her gaze to meet his own. She flushed under his touch but looked at him defiantly.

"The truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," he demanded.

And Dorothy replied:

"Fred Raymond and his mother called on me the morning after their reception, and kindly invited me to attend the morning service at St. Michael's Chapel with them next Sunday, and I, of course, accepted."

"Of course," sneered Tom, the first real anger or disapproval she had ever seen in him flashing over his features; "Fred Raymond is handsome, wealthy, drives the prettiest horses, and owns the finest establishment in the country."

Dorothy's red lips curled faintly.

"Certainly, she said," pushing Tom's hand away and turning again to the piano, "and no girl in her senses would refuse his courtesy and attention!"

And then she struck recklessly into the air of "Captain Jinks," improvising some wonderful variations, while Tom strode from the room and closed the door behind him with a good deal of emphasis.

Now among Dorothy's possessions was an exquisite little music-box, made in the form of a tiny album, with velvet covers and a gold clasp. A gentle pressure upon the clasp would set the instrument, which played several popular airs.

Sunday morning came—a clear, bright, exquisite December day—and the Raymond horses, splendid with gold-mounted trappings, were already dashing up the broad driveway which led to the Sternaway mansion, when Dorothy suddenly remembered that she had left her prayer-book on the sofa in her room.

She ran up stairs hastily, and catching up the dainty velvet-bound volume, was back again just as Tibbie, the little kitchen-maid, swung the door open.

A moment later, seated in state upon the luxurious cushions besides the aristocratic Madame Raymond, with the young gentleman in faultless attire beaming complacently opposite, little Dorothy, in a secret flutter of delight and gratified vanity, but outwardly the picture of smiling composure, was whirled away to St. Michael's.

Tom Sloan, who had just come down stairs, paused in the doorway to fasten his glove, and looked after the rapidly retreating barouche with a very unusual fire in his gray eyes.

Twenty minutes later he sauntered up the broad aisle at St. Michael's and seated himself directly behind Dorothy.

How do you suppose Dorothy knew who was there? I cannot tell you.

Certainly—guarded by the magnificent Madame Raymond on one side, and the exquisite Frederick on the other—she would not have been guilty of the impropriety of looking behind her; yet she knew, as well as she knew that her name was Dorothy Benson, that Tom Sloan sat there, quiet, cool, indifferent as ever.

"Dearly beloved brethren—" began the rector, in solemn accents.

Dorothy essayed to open the clasp of her prayer-book.

"The Scripture moveth us in sundry places—"

Click, went something under Dorothy's fingers, and then—horribly distinct and irreverent and jaunty—the music-box, which Dorothy had mistaken for her prayer-book, started trippingly into the air of 'Little Buttercup.'

"To acknowledge and confess our manifold sins and wickedness—" read the rector.

"Tum ti-ty iddy ti! Tum ti-ty iddy!" tinkled the music-box.

And for one dreadful minute it seemed to Dorothy that she must die.

Then an hysterical laugh was barely smothered in her handkerchief.

An old lady in the pew before them turned around and looked over her spectacles at Dorothy with an expression of virtuous indignation.

Fred Raymond and his mother both turned the color of a boiled lobster; and some of the younger portion of the congregation giggled audibly.

The rector kept on:

"And that we should not dissemble nor cloak them—"

And the music-box kept on in rollicking independence:

"I'm sweet little Buttercup—tum ti, ty iddy ti!"

And then, just as the last fragment of Dorothy's self-control was giving way, a dark coat sleeve reached over her shoulder, and Tom Sloan's muscular white hand took the unlucky music-box in its grasp, and directly Tom Sloan himself went striding down the aisle with great composure, while from his overcoat pocket that diabolical little instrument still rattled away at the tune of "Little Buttercup."

Dorothy uttered a devout mental thanksgiving as the great doors of St. Michael's closed after him.

The rest of the service proceeded quietly, but Dorothy had an uneasy consciousness that she had lost the favor of the Raymonds.

They carried her home in their handsome barouche, and invited her ceremoniously to call on them, but the girl was quick to see and feel, and she knew that Madame Raymond would never forgive her for the ridiculous mistake which had drawn the eyes of the whole of the congregation upon them at St. Michael's that morning. She bowed a return to their formal adieux, and ran into the sitting-room burning with mortification.

There was no one there. She threw herself upon the lounge and gave way to a storm of mingled tears and laughter. Some one entered in the midst of it, and crossing the room, knelt beside her, and put one arm over her shoulders.

"Oh, Hattie!" she cried; "Fred Raymond and his mother are the coldest, proudest, hatefullest things that I ever saw!"

A soft moustache pressed her cheek; she looked up. It was Tom Sloan. Much to that individual's surprise, instead of running away from him as he had expected, she turned her face to his broad shoulder, and crumpled his coat collar with one small hand.

"Tom! It was splendid of you to take that horrid music-box away!"

"Dollie, dearest, I must have my reward. Marry me—that's a good child."

"I will," said Dollie.

And she did.

THIS HARROW HAS ONLY TO BE USED TO BE APPRECIATED.
See it before purchasing and you will buy no other.
The Penn Harrow

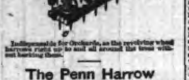
Indispensable for Orchards, as the revolving wheel harrows right up to and all around the trees without barking them.
The Penn Harrow
CHANGED TO SINGLE "A" HARROW.



By removing the wing and wheel from the original you have a complete one-horse "A" Harrow.
The Penn Harrow

Remove the wheel from the original, reverse the wing, and it makes the most complete Double "A" Harrow in the market.
The Penn Harrow

The Penn Harrow
ON ITS SLED.

It has always been a great inconvenience to get the Harrow to and from the field. The Penn Harrow obviates this, as no matter which Harrow you wish to use by the combination, it has its own sled to haul it on.
The Penn Harrow
Is made of the best white oak, with steel teeth, well painted, in every way first-class. Formerly a harrow was the most unhandy implement on the farm; with our improvement it is the most convenient. MISCELLANEOUS READING.

OUR TWO DREAMS.

"John, do you believe in dreams?" I lay down my paper and look at my pretty, brown-eyed cousin—twice removed—as she stands before me in her soft, cream white dress with a bunch of roses at her belt.

"Why?" I asked.

"Oh, because!"—interlacing her white fingers and rubbing a flower in the carpet with the toe of a tiny slipper.

A pink tinge creeps to the clear olive cheek, and Jennie glances at me shyly out of her soft dark eyes.

"Oh, you horrible old John!" she breaks out suddenly. Because I had a dream about you last night, and I suspect"—pausing and shaking her finger at me—"It's going to come true?"

"Do you, really? I hoped you dreamed something nice, then. What was it?"

"I dreamed I was in church. Suddenly you came in with a lady leaning upon your arm; you came right up to me and said: 'I am going to be married.' Then the minister came and married you; but the lady did not lift the veil, and I could not see her face; but, you may just as well tell me, John, for I almost know."

"Do you?" I answered, sarcastically.—"Then you had best tell me, for I confess I don't."

Jennie is silent, and my mind returns to her first question, which I repeat musingly: "Do you believe in dreams?"

Upon my word, Jennie, I think I do believe in dreams! Come and sit here beside me, and I will tell you something strange that once befell me, and you shall decide whether or not I should believe in dreams.

After father died, it was discovered that he had, in an evil hour, been induced to speculate, and being an honest man, and ignorant of the ways of the world, he became a victim—first to his own lack of shrewdness, and secondly to the over-supply of the same article owned by others. In a word, he had ventured nearly his whole fortune and had lost. The remorse and anxiety killed him.

I was just twenty, and then at college—a mere boy in experience, and totally unfitted to step into my poor father's vacant place as head of the family. My mother was helpless with grief, and my sister delicate and timid; there was no one to arrange or advise, so I was obliged to come forward and do my very best.

To add to the embarrassment of the situation, I fell madly in love. I am sure, Jennie, no lad of twenty ever loved more honestly than I did, or loved a prettier girl than Belle Calder. You know her? Well, was she not, is she not, beautiful? I think never a face more perfect was made.

After we had laid poor father to rest I went to Belle, told her the sad complication of affairs, but assured her of my fixed determination to work as no man had ever yet worked to retrieve our fallen fortune, and begged her to have faith in my love and give me the right to look forward to the day when I could give her a home no less luxurious than her own.

I shall never forget her expression. Her lovely eyes, blue as velvet, opened wide with horror, and her sweet, rose-bud mouth trembled as she answered—

"Won't you be awfully old and ugly before you make all that money, John? And won't I be a horrible old maid, like Aunt Maria?"

Don't look so indignant, Jennie! Remember how young she was, and how petted and indulged.

I took her in my arms and soothed her fears. The dread of losing her made me mad: her presence intoxicated me with delight. With her little, soft, white hand in mine, her golden head resting on my bosom, and her sweet breath fanning my hot cheek, I was filled with bliss; I would have bartered everything for a month of such happiness.

I am not an old man, Jennie; but the possibility of ever feeling again the mad passion that I felt for Belle that night has passed with that night—long ago—so far past, little cousin, that I can think of it as a thing quite apart from myself, and wonder at it as I might some enjoyment of my boyhood, impossible for manhood to enter into.

It is not love, this wild fever, but passion, such as leads the unfortunate victim to despair and crime. It was real enough to me then! Never was passion purer, devotion more self-sacrificing—but passion for all that.

Filled with ambitious and faith in my beloved, I threw myself into the place my father had left vacant. I sought and obtained a situation, resolving to rise if industry and an indomitable will could aid me.

My days were passed in patient labor—my evenings in hard study. The firm of solicitors I was with were rising men—men who worked hard at their profession, and tolerated no idleness in those about them. My desire, as you may imagine, was to win a place in the firm. I was young; I had a well disciplined mind—thanks to my painstaking tutor—and now that love and hope beckoned a goal ahead that I must and would gain.

One poor, miserable fortnight Belle kept faith with me; then I received a cold note of dismissal from Mr. Calder, and a little, meek, obedient note from Belle, bidding me good-by.

Do you wish to know what I did when I read those notes, Jennie? I will tell you: I put my head down on the table and wept like a child! It was the death of my youth and trust. Even now I am not ashamed of those tears. It was the supreme moment which separates the real from the unreal—the hour that sweeps from our glorious vision the sweet deliriums of fancy and discloses the dusty highway of life through which our weary feet must struggle.

From that hour I became a man. The curtain fell upon the fairy scene I had created in my own mind, and life in all its reality stood out grimly before me.

I had been rambling through sunny meadows, filled with singing birds and babling brooks. Henceforth my path stretched away, among the haunts of men. I should have been less than human could I have bidden farewell to my enchanted home without emotion. But my tears washed from my heart all bitterness, and I passed the threshold into a new life, and closed the door behind me with a firm hand—as one closes the coffin lid upon a burden of life—alone.

That night I sat late in my room, pondering over the question of ways and means. My mother and sisters were depending upon me, and henceforth they alone should be my inspiration.

At a very late hour I retired, and, worn out with labor and conflicting emotions, I almost immediately fell asleep. For the first time since his death I dreamed of my father. He came to me with a face strangely illumined with joy, and though he did not seem to speak, his looks expressed approbation and encouragement. Then he faded from my sight, and I was alone on a strange road. The place was deserted, and intense darkness enveloped everything. While I was wondering why I was there in that unfrequented spot, I suddenly became aware of a wood upon my right. Proceeding towards it, I came upon a man—a fierce dark man, whose face was half hidden, half shown by the uncertain light of a lantern which he carried.

In vain I tried to look down; some fantastic power which dreams possess kept my eyes entranced. From the lantern up to the face of the carrier my gaze wondered—below that line there was nothing! While I looked, wondering vaguely why I could not see, this man drew from some hidden pocked a small hammer, and going to a hollow tree dropped it into its trunk, and I awoke!

The sun was just raising, and I sprang up, feverish and went out for a walk. The day passed much as other days: I read the papers without noticing their contents—swallowing my meals without receiving much benefit—studied at night without gaining much information, and retired, weary and discouraged.

Again I dreamed of my father—again I walked by the dense wood, and saw the same mysterious man. This time he crossed my path running at full speed, with terror stamped on every feature.

I began to think I was going mad, so much did this dream affect me, and I resolved to give up my studies for a few nights and seek some harmless recreation. I did so, and the dream disturbed me no more.

The summer passed. Autumn followed, and winter, with its ice and snow, was fairly enthroned as king of the weather, and no great change in my affairs had taken place.

One day our firm was employed to defend a man accused of muder. The fearful deed had been committed some time in the spring, and since then he had been in goal, awaiting his trial.

I was much interested in the case; first, because the whole thing was incased in mystery, and secondly, because this supposed murderer looked so unlikely to commit so foul a deed.—There was a frank, honest look in his blue eyes, and an earnestness in his voice, that convinced me of his innocence.

It fell to my lot to copy much of the evidence and from the first I was struck with the strong array of circumstantial evidence against him. The murdered man had been found in a wood not far from the city, a mark about the size of a six-penny piece upon the right temple, made with some blunt instrument—probably, the butt of a pistol. On the ground beside the dead man was found his pocket-book rifled of its contents, though a valuable ring remained untouched upon his finger. A card was found in his pocket which led to his identification, and an investigation of his papers and effects, discovered two notes of large amounts, bearing the name of the supposed murderer.

This man when arrested had betrayed strong emotion; but on being asked to tell his whereabouts on the evening of the murder, was unable or unwilling to do so.

The trial was drawing to a close, and in spite of the utmost effort on the part of our firm, this man was in a fair way to be convicted. No amount of threats or persuasion could induce him to break the stubborn silence he had imposed upon himself regarding his whereabouts on the fatal night. The most he would say was: "I am innocent, but all I could say would only make me seem more guilty."

It was during the recapitulation of the evidence that I entered the court, having some business of importance upon which to consult my employees. The doctor who had made the post-mortem examination was in the witness box, and stated that the deceased came to his death from a blow given on the right temple with a blunt instrument—probably the butt of a pistol or hammer.

As this word fell from his lips a sudden relation flashed across my mind—I remember my dream! And at the same instant as if to assist my tired memory, another witness stepped into the box, in whom I recognized the dark man whom I had seen hide the hammer.

Utterly beside myself, I forgot time and place and with a frantic scream I sprang forward and seized the man by the throat.

"Confess, you villian!" I shouted. "You killed that man with a hammer, and hid it in a hollow tree! Confess, I say! Confess!"

The effect was electrical. The man, utterly confounded by the suddenness of the attack, howled for mercy and acknowledged his crime before he knew what he said.

The excitement was tremendious. I was conveyed in a carriage which was driven to the wood. Fortunately I was able to identify the tree, and on investigation the hammer was discovered.

My dream made my fortune, Jennie. I was soon afterwards made a junior partner, and now can count myself a wealthy man. Mr. Calder has long since made amends for his unkindness, and Belle—beautiful Belle—still unmarried, smiles on me with those rosy lips and matchless eyes.

"Are you going, Jennie? Wait one moment—I have something more tell. I have had another dream. For five years it has haunted my waking and my sleeping hours. May I tell it to you? It is a pair of honest brown eyes that grow dim with sympathy or brighten with joy—of a gentle, tender heart I have grown to prize above all things. And I dream, dear Jennie, that perhaps I may win them for my own—to have and to hold, my darling. Answer, Jennie, my dearest love! Can I hope?"

BEHAVING WELL.

A man married a young lady because she showed such a sweet temper at a dinner when the waiter spilled soup all over her silk dress. One evening long after the event, they were sitting before the fire, the children having gone to bed, and were talking about old times, when he said: "My dear, I never told you, I think how I first thought I would like to marry you, did I?" "Why, gracious goodness, no, never." "Well," he said, "do you remember that dinner at Mrs. Simpkins' where your dress was spoilt by the soup?" "Indeed, I do," she replied. "I shall never forget it as long as I live." "Well," he continued, "you behaved so well about it that I thought you a perfect jewel." "Yes," she answered, "I remember having behaved well at the time, but, good land, you should have seen the marks of my teeth on the bed-post that night!"

"There," she said, waving her marriage certificate in the air, "there is the flag of our Union!"

A stock breeder in New Mexico has a horse pasture of sixteen square miles all fenced in. It must worry a man to have to run all over the lot in the wet grass to catch a horse to drive down-town after a half gallon of coal oil.

PLAYING COMET.

"But, look-here," says the grocery man, as he gave the boy a little dried up lemon about as big as a prune, and told him he was a terror, "what is the matter with your eye winkers and your hair? They seem to be burned off."

"O, thunder, didn't pa tell you about the comet exploding and burning us all? That was the worst thing since the flood, when Noar ran the excursion boat from Kalamazoo to Mount Ararat. You see we had been reading about the comet, which is visible at four o'clock in the morning, and I heard pa tell the hired girl to wake him and ma up when she got up to set the pancakes and go to early mass, so they could see the critter. The hired girl is a cathlick, and she don't make no fuss about it, but she has got more good, square relidgin than a dozen like pa. It makes a good deal of difference how relidgin affects different people, don't it? Now pa's relidgin makes him wild, and he wants to kick my pants, and pull my hair, but the hired girl's relidgin makes her want to hug me. If I am abused, she puts anarchy on my bruises and gives me pie. Pa wouldn't get up at four o'clock in the morning to go to early mass, unless he could take a fish pole along and some angle worms. The hired girl prays when no one sees her but God, but pa wants to get a church full of sisterin' and pray loud, as though he was an auctioneer selling tin razors.

"Well, when I heard pa tell the hired girl to wake him and ma up, I told her to wake me up about half an hour before she waked pa up, and then I got my chum to stay with me, and we made a comet to play on pa. You see my room is right over pa's room, and I got two lengths of stove pipe and covered it all over with phosphorus, so they looked just as bright as a comet. Then we got two Roman candles and a big sky-rocket, and we were going to touch off the Roman candles and sky rocket just as pa and ma got to looking at the comet. I didn't know that a sky rocket would kick back, did you? Well, you'd a dide to see that comet. We tied a piece of white rubber garden hose to the stove pipe for a tail and went to bed, and when the girl woke us up we laid for pa and ma.

"Pretty soon we heard pa's window open, and I looked out, and pa and ma had their heads and half of their bodies out of the window. They had their night shirts on and looked just like the pictures of Millerites waiting for the world to come to an end. Pa looked up and seed the stove pipe, and he said: 'Hanner, for God's sake, look up there. That is the darnest comet I ever see. It is as bright as day. See the tail of it. Now that is worth getting up to see.'

"Just then my chum lit the two Roman candles and I touched off the rocket, and that's where my eye winkers went. The rockets busted the joints of the stove-pipe, and they fell down on pa, but ma got her head inside before the comet struck, and wasn't hurt, but one length of stove-pipe struck pa endways on the neck and almost cut a biscuit out of him, and the fire and sparks just poured down in his hair and burned his night-shirt. Pa was scart. He thought the world was coming to an end, and the window came down on his back, and he began to sing 'Earth's but a desert drear. Heaven is my home.'

"I see he was caught in the window, and I went down stairs to put out the fire on his night shirt, and put up the window to let him in, and he said; 'My boy, your ma and I are going to Heaven, but I fear you will go to the bad place,' and I told him I would take my chances, and he better put on his pants if he was going anywhere that there would be liable to be ladies present, and when he got his head in ma told him the world was not coming to an end, but somebody had been setting off fire-works, and she said she guessed it was their dear little boy, and when I saw pa feeling under the bed for a bedslat I got up stairs pretty previous, now, and don't you forget it, and ma put cold cream where the sparks burnt pa's shirt, and pa said another day wouldn't pass over his head before he had me in the reform school.

"Well, if I go to the reform school, somebody's got to pay attention, you can bet your liver. A boy can't have any fun these days without everybody thinks he is a heathen. What hurt does it do to play comet? It's a mean father that won't stand a little schorchin' in the interests of science."

The boy went out, scratching the places where his eye-winkers were, and then the groceryman knew what it was that caused the fire engines to get around at four o'clock in the morning, looking for a fire.—Milwaukee Sun.

CROQUET PROBLEM.

"Editor in?"

"Yes," replied the horse reporter to the person asking the question—a young man with a tablespoon-hat and you-may-kiss-me-but-don't-you-tell-papa moustache, who stood in the doorway—"the editor is in, and the chances are that he prefers staying in, rather than run any risk of falling against you."

"Well, of course, you know," said the young man, "very likely it wouldn't be absolutely necessary for me to see the really and truly editor about this matter that I wanted to have settled. It's a question to be answered, you know."

"I should surmise," said the horse reporter, "that an average deck-hand could successfully wrestle with any problem you could evolve."

"Well, I don't know," continued the young man. "This is a real hard question, you know, and a good many of our set over on the West Side have tried awfully to settle it, but we can't. I never saw such a provoking thing in all my life, and last night I was talking with my room-mate about it and we got real angry, and it looked once as if we should strike each other. I wouldn't have had a row with Cholly for anything, you know, because we have been in the same store for nearly three years now, and when he was promoted to the ribbon counter he always spoke to me just the same as when we were both in the threads."

"In what?" asked the horse reporter.

"In the threads—the thread department, you know, and I always said that nothing could make me go back on Cholly—you know how anything like that makes two fellows awful chums."

"Yes, I know," said the horse reporter, "but what is your question?"

"Well, you see, some people are playing croquet, and a rover is driven up close to the home-stake. Now, another man he is dead on the ball, but having a stroke he plays on the rover and forces it against the stake. Now, I say the rover is dead, and the other fellows they say it isn't, and we've been having an awful time about it over on the West Side, and"—

"Yes, you told me that before. Our croquet editor is away on his vacation. He spends it in the Asylum for Feeble-Minded People, getting pointers from the inmates, but like enough I can fix this thing for you."

"Oh! that's awfully jolly. Have a cigarette?"

"No, thank you. I am over nine years old. But about the croquet matter. You say the rover is close to the stake?"

"Yes."

"And the next player knocks it against the stake?"

"Yes."

"And then the player after him claims that the rover is dead?"

"Yes, that's it; and they can't agree."

"Well," said the horse reporter, "I should say that the man who got the first knock-down ought to win."

"But they don't knock each other down. They don't quarrel at all."

"You said this was a croquet game, didn't you?"

"Why, certainly."

"And they didn't quarrel?"

"Why, of course not."

"Then the fairies are indeed kind to the dry-goods clerks, and I can only say that your best plan is to disguise yourself with a cigar and ride down in the elevator."—Chicago Tribune.

Somerset County Nominations.

FOR MEMBER OF ASSEMBLY
HENRY P. CORTELYOU, of Franklin Township.

FOR SURROGATE,
LEWIS M. CODINGTON,
Of Bridgewater Township.

CONGRESS.

The Democratic nominee for Congress is the Hon. Miles Ross of Middlesex.

It is time he has already held the position longer than is customary in New Jersey, but a representative body of Democracy, duly chosen and convened, having placed him again in the field as a candidate, it is certainly Democratic to cheerfully endorse such action at the polls.

It is true he voted for the River and Harbor bill, but it is equally the truth that however objectionable that measure may be viewed as a whole, it contained many needed and proper appropriations, upon which were those specially advocated by him for the Third District of New Jersey, and is furthermore a fact, that all such improvement appropriations were inserted at the urgent written request of his constituents and are for the public good.

Mr. Ross has proven himself to be a practical and intelligent business Congressman, always at the post of duty and ever ready to discharge its varied and difficult obligations.

No man can truthfully charge him with personal dishonesty, or treachery to either country or party.

He has faithfully served the people in the past and will continue to do so in the future.

We cannot perceive any valid reason why he should not receive solid Democratic support—

Vote for MILES ROSS.

COUNTY CLERK.

It is needless to speak of the present County Clerk, James S. Vosseller, who is a candidate for re-election, as everybody knows him, everybody esteems him, and nearly everybody intends to vote for him. Competent and faithful as an official, public spirited as a citizen, and generous hearted as a man, his superior claims for suffrage vanquishes partisan opposition—

Vote for
JAMES S. VOSSELLER.

SURROGATE.

Prompt and efficient performance of every duty, with marked interest and uniform courtesy, is the highest possible evidence of worth in a public officer. That credit eminently belongs to Mr. Gerber, the Democratic candidate for Surrogate, and is freely accorded by all persons who have had official intercourse with him, be they Democrats or Republicans.

The office of Surrogate is one of the most important in the County, and there is no citizen better qualified or more deserving to fill it than the present incumbent—

Vote for
JAMES J. GERBER.

ASSEMBLY.

The Democratic Convention acted wisely and well in making Dr. Hough the candidate for Assembly. He served in the Legislature with distinction several years ago and is thoroughly fitted to do so again. The people would advance their best interests by renewing his commission as a Legislator—

Vote for
D. W. C. HOUGH.

CORONER.

The office of Coroner is associated with weighty responsibilities and should be properly filled. The Democratic candidate, Doctor Cladek, of Rahway, possesses every needed requirement. He is an active, intelligent and much respected physician, and in all particulars the right man for the position—

Vote for
WALTER B. CLADEK.

Ere another issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST election day will have passed. Let every Democrat keep at work with a determination that knows no such word as fail—make every effort possible to arouse the people and bring out a full Democratic vote on election day. We shall have the assistance of hundreds of honest Republicans who are disgusted with the trickery, fraud and corruption of the machine and cannot swallow the distasteful candidates that have been crammed down their throats by the bosses. A full Democratic vote will ensure a great Democratic victory. This test of Democracy now is a sincere and energetic effort to elect all our candidates.

Vote for Miles Ross.

Vote early and Solid!

Vote for James J. Gerber.

Look out for illegal voters.

Vote for James S. Vosseller.

Beware of fraudulent tickets.

Vote the entire Democratic ticket.

Vote for Ross, Hough, Vosseller, Gerber and Cladek.

The Democratic candidates are all good men and true.

Let every citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote do so, but none other.

Did the Republicans miss the star route corruption fund in the election in Ohio?

The Republican bosses have business up Salt River this season. The noted stream should have been remembered in the River and Harbor bill.

A great many Republicans who have not been in the habit of showing weakness at the knees, now seem to regard defeat as a foregone conclusion.

The home of Mr. Rutherford B. Hayes went Democratic by 800 majority, and the home of the late President Garfield gave a net Democratic gain of 30 votes.

The six-days' walking match came to an end Saturday at 9:43 P. M., resulting in a victory for Fitzgerald, whose record reached 577 miles, 2 laps, in 141 hours, 43 minutes.

Residents of Somerset county, vote for Henry S. Harris for Congress.

Gov. Ludlow has appointed Richard S. Jenkins of Camden as one of the Fish Commissioners vice Benjamin P. Howell, deceased. George Liddle of Perth Amboy, was also appointed a Deputy New Jersey Pilot.

It might be well for workingmen to remember that just two years ago the Republicans were promising a big raise of wages if Garfield was elected President. It would be also well to remember that the big raise in wages hasn't reached us yet.

The Morris county Democrats have made the following nominations for the Assembly: First district, Edward A. Quayle of Morris; Second, Edwin C. Bloxham of Boonton; Third, James H. Neighbour of Randolph. The Republicans of the Third District have decided to make no nomination.

Residents of Somerset county, vote for Henry P. Cortelyou for Assembly.

It would show better Democratic faith in those editors of Democratic newspapers who are endeavoring to defeat the election of John Carpenter, Jr., to the Senate, from Hunterdon County, if they would turn in and help him. He has been regularly and fairly nominated, and is capable of occupying the position. The Republicans are only too glad to note such discord among the Democrats.

Residents of Somerset county, vote for Lewis M. Codington for Surrogate.

Republican sheets have descended to the low indecency of casting insinuations against the private character of the Democratic candidate for Surrogate, for the object of making political capital. The columns of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST have not nor never will be used to bring reproach upon the character of any political candidate, and the base insinuations cast adrift by the Republican sheets against James J. Gerber will act as a boomerang next Tuesday. Mr. Gerber is in every sense, an upright, sober, business man, and has conducted the affairs of the Surrogate's office in so commendatory a manner the past five years, as to receive the praise of all who have had dealings with him in his official capacity. If the Republicans can find no better arguments for the election of their candidate, Mr. Parrott, than that of insinuating against the character of his opponent, Mr. Parrott will be left at home by a larger majority than he anticipates.

REPUBLICANS DISAGREE.

The following letter is from the pen of one the staunchest Stalwarts of the district, and shows that there are Republicans who will not vote for "the rich young man" for Congress. The letter speaks for itself:

To the Editor of the Perth Amboy Democrat:

Within the past twelve months the increase of the commerce of Perth Amboy has been ten-fold greater than ever before in the history of the city. During that time there has safely entered this port twenty large steamships, two ships and ten barks, drawing as high as twenty-two feet of water, bringing a revenue to this city of over $100,000 and distributing the same to hundreds for their labor, so that our city is at present the most busy and prosperous of any city of its size on the Atlantic coast. A few years ago if any man dared make the assertion that a three thousand ton ship, drawing twenty-two feet of water, could safely enter this port he would have been laughed at. But this fact has been clearly demonstrated. Vessels from Africa, England, France, Germany, Italy and Spain, both steam and sail, now enter this port. The officers of these vessels are well pleased with the prompt business dispatch and the courtesy of the port officials and the citizens generally. Our city is rapidly acquiring a name at home and abroad, and merchants evince a disposition to charter vessels to this port on account of the less expense entailed and the more rapid dispatch than in other ports on our seaboard. It must be admitted that the Lehigh Valley Railroad is the first cause for this unexpected and unprecedented increase in our commerce. But could these vessels ever have entered this port without the required depth of water? It was on this issue that Ross and Clark ran for Congress—the improvement of our rivers and harbors. The promise made by Miles Ross, our present Congressman, has been faithfully kept. He has labored unceasingly for the benefit of this district and his constituents, and has done more for the prosperity of this city than all the Congressmen preceding him. The appropriations already made for improving the channel to this port have been paid back more than double into the United States Treasury, not speaking of those who have been benefited thereby. If through the narrow channel our commerce has been so largely increased, what may not we expect when the channel has its prescribed width and depth? And as this is true of Perth Amboy, may it not be true of New Brunswick, South Amboy and Woodbridge? And as there are no live issues at present between the two parties, is it not policy for us as citizens of the Third Congressional District to return to Washington the man who has so fearlessly performed his duty and faithfully fulfilled the promises made to his constituents? I therefore call on all honest, impartial and fair-minded citizens to sustain him who has so nobly stood by you.

THOMAS B LIDDLE.

Perth Amboy, N. J., Oct. 19.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Charles Lyons has swapped his horses for Roulston's team of mules.

Miss Ella Connoly, daughter of Collector Connoly, is visiting at Susquehanna, Pennsylvania.

On Sunday, Nov. 5, a Union meeting will be held in the Presbyterian church. Addresses by the several pastors of our town, and others.

Don't trade off a vote.

Our Westfield amateur minstrel troupe under the leadership of Applegate and Wilcox, gave an entertainment in Hotel Hall on Saturday evening last.

Samuel Godshalk is still suffering from an abcess on the left eye. He expects to go to Philadelphia this week to the eye infirmary to have it operated upon.

Vote early.

David Townley, one of our old residents, is lying dangerously ill. He was taken sick last week and is now suffering from spinal meningitis. His physicians have no hopes of his recovery. He buried his wife about two months ago.

Vote the whole Democratic Ticket.

The Rev. E. H. Bronson, pastor of the Baptist church of our town, read his resignation from the pulpit on Sunday morning last. Action on the resignation by the congregation was laid over until Sunday, November 5th. He has accepted a call to a church in Philadelphia.

Vote for Gerber for Surrogate.

In the language of a Republican of our town, the extension committee of the Republican party met at the post office on Monday evening last. Mr. Sheldon, their candidate for Assembly, was present with them, probably trying to heal up the feeling against him in regard to his votes in favor of all monopolies.

Charles Lyons has sold out his business as expressman at the depot to G. H. Kouter. It will be carried on under the charge of Samuel H. Lockwood. Mr. Lyons has served the public faithfully for the past seven years, and will now devote his whole time to business of furniture removal. Don't forget Gus, when you have a package to be delivered at your home.

Vote for Vosseller for Clerk.

The anniversary of the Methodist Sunday School will be held next Sunday, Nov. 5, at 2:30 p.m. Addresses will be delivered by John Davidson, Esq., of Elizabeth, and Rev. N. W. Cadwell, pastor of the Presbyterian Church. There will also be singing by the children, accompanied by the organ and cornet. A large attendance is looked for and those who wish to get good seats will do well to go early.

Hard to beat. During the past year, Orren Pierson raised a field of rye of about 12 acres upon the farm of James T. Pierson, adjoining Broad street, near our village. It was remarked by every person passing along the street what a splendid piece of rye it was. The stalks of some of it measured seven feet nine inches in height. Before harvesting, Mr. Pierson had a portion of the lot accurately measured by a surveyor, which contained one and seven-eighths acres. He stored the rye on that piece by itself and some time since had it threshed. It yielded 77½ bushels of splendid rye; about 40 bushels to the acre.

On Saturday evening last, John C. Sanford of our town received a telegram from Perryville, Md., that his brother William, who was a painter by trade and formerly lived here, had been killed. It was the first that had been heard of William in four years. John C. Sanford immediately left for Perryville, and returned on Monday morning at 1:11 with the body. Funeral services were held at the residence of Mr. Sanford on Elmer St., and the remains were taken to Orange, N. J., for burial in the family plot. We learn from his brother John that the deceased was killed by a passenger train on the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad at about 5 o'clock, Saturday afternoon. William had been working in a canning factory at Havre de Grace, and started to cross the railroad bridge at that point. In stepping from one track to another his foot caught in a frog of one of the switches, and he was unable to extricate himself. He saw the train approaching and waved his hands for them to stop but the engineer did not slow up in the least. He then threw himself back from the train so that it would not strike his body, and it passed over his leg crushing and mangling it terribly. He was found about two hours afterward by the section hands yet alive and conscious, and able to describe the accident. A physician was immediately summoned, who decided that the leg ought to be amputated as the only chance of saving life, but the victim died under the operation. The unfortunate man having told where his relatives resided, his fate was immediately telegraphed to his brother.

Vote for Ross for Congress.

EDSALL'S

Our New Department which we advertised last week, consisting of Cloth Coats, Jackets, Fur Lined Silk Circulars, Dolmans, Ulsters, Raglans, etc., proved a very successful acquisition to our already attractive assortment of desirable goods. Many of our lady patrons were free in their expressions of admiration in the elegant display that was made of fine and beautiful garments, and all agreed that our prices were not only as low as they had seen them elsewhere, but were really much lower than any that had been shown them. The weather during our opening was very unfavorable to trade in this line of goods, and yet our sales exceeded our most sanguine expectations, especially in the more costly garments. The Satin Cicilian Raglans at $87 were among the first that were sold, and was considered one of the greatest bargains we offered; others at a less price were equally admired, and a most gratifying proof to us of the sincerity of their admiration was that in many cases the admirers took the garments home with them, and left us the price for the same. We shall keep this department well supplied with the most fashionable and attractive goods in the market, and will guarantee the price of every garment to be as low as the lowest, regardless of where it may come from.

If we sell a cloak and it proves unsatisfactory in any respect we will refund the money to the purchaser on their request so to do.

In each of our other departments we are prepared to offer special inducements, especially in Ladies' and Gents' Merino Underwear and Hosiery, also in Laces, Fichus, Fancy Goods and Notions of all kinds. In the new price list we published last week will be found many inducements to purchase of us, as we have revised the prices of many articles, and we feel confident that none can undersell us. If you have not received one you can be supplied on application at our store.

THE Warren Democrat has recently been improved in looks by a new dress of type and enlarged to the size of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST. Harris, who, however, will be elected.

THE amount of business done at the Plainfield postoffice for the month of October, will give the public some idea regarding the importance of our little city. The Chautauqua Circle alone received in three weeks over four thousand letters.

He will also remove all the Lake View Hotel buildings at the head of "Wesley Lake."

THE Plainfield Ladies' Relief Association held its annual anniversary at the Crescent avenue church during Tuesday evening last. Demarest, Mrs S. R. Struthers, Miss Gussie Runyon and Miss Clara Dunn, contraltos; Messers S. R. Struthers, Edw. Ryder and Chas. McCutchen, tenors; and Messrs And. Gavett and Frank S. Runyon, bassos. Fine Workmanship.

While visiting the steam planing and moulding mill of Messrs. Shepherd, Johnson & Godown, in North Plainfield, recently, we were shown some elegant specimens of fine work in course of completion for the handsome residence of H. P. Talmadge, Esq., at Netherwood, the above firm having the contract for its construction. The work alluded to, are wooden mantels, fashioned from the finest of cherry wood in Queen Anne style of architecture. This style of mantel is very expensive and requires the most skilled workmen to construct them. So delicate and fine is the carving and panel work that it must nearly all be done by hand without the aid of machinery. The mantels are sometimes ebonized, which gives them a beautiful appearance with their tracings on wood, which could scarcely be produced on marble. This style of mantel is coming more generally into use in the construction of elegant and costly residences, and the above firm are making a specialty in their manufacture as well as other hard wood ornaments and finish in fine houses. They are a most successful firm, and their success is due to their turning out the best of work at fair prices. They are constantly adding new machinery of the latest patterns to aid them in filling increasing orders.

The Assembly Convention.

The Third District Democratic Assembly Convention was held last Friday afternoon, at Lambert's Hotel, in Upper Rahway. Mr. Louis F. Wadsworth, of this city, was chosen chairman, after the Convention had been called to order by James T. Ritchie. Mr. Wm. McCloskey, of Rahway, was elected secretary. A committee on credentials, consisting of James T. Richie, of Fanwood; D. G. Hetfield, Rahway, and V. L. Frazee of Plainfield, was appointed. The vacancy in Clark township was filled by appointing William Richards to act as delegate and as two vacancies existed in Westfield delegation, Judge Hyer and D. G. Hetfield of Rahway was elected by the Convention to fill same, over the protest of Joseph Moffatt. The wards and townships were called for nominations, with the following result: Rahway—1st Ward named M. H. Acken; 2nd, James T. Ritchie; 3d, no nomination; 4th, no nomination. Plainfield and Fanwood, no nomination. Westfield, Stephen S. Mapes. Clark township, Dr. D. W. C. Hough. An informal ballot was taken, Judge Hyer and D. G. Hetfield being appointed as tellers.

Acken received 1 vote, Ritchie 3, Mapes 4, B. B. Miller 1, Dr. Hough 11 and there were 12 blanks. A recess of 15 minutes was taken, and upon reassembling a formal ballot resulted as follows: Dr. D. W. C. Hough, 27; Mapes, 2; Ritchie, 1; J. W. H. 1, and three blanks. On motion of Mr. Chase of Plainfield, the nomination was made unanimous. A committee consisting of V. L. Frazee, Wm. Richards and Joseph Moffatt, brought the candidate before the convention, who briefly thanked them for the honor conferred and promised to do all in his power to win. Judge Hyer and G. R. Lindsay made short addresses. On motion it was decided to hold the next convention at Plainfield. Convention then adjourned.

The Plainfield Delegation consisted of Messrs L. F. Wadsworth, V. L. Frazee, J. Rafferty, P. Muldoon, J. A. Demarest, Stephen Davis, J. Linbarger, W. H. Warner, W. S. Chase, Jno. Duffy, P. Gaillert and Robt. Flynn.

Remarkable Success.

We glean the following from the Lambertville Beacon in relation to the physician mentioned. Dr. Reed's dates in Plainfield will be noticed among the advertisements on our first page:

"Dr. R. Reed, of this city, is a physician who is attracting more than ordinary attention in the practice of his profession. While he is first-class in all the departments by which M. D.'s secure rank, he makes a specialty of the treatment of hemorrhoids, or piles, and here is where he is securing his brightest laurels. In this special feature his success has been remarkable, having treated cases of the severest character—pronounced incurable—and succeeded in making quick and permanent cures, as many of our best citizens are glad to be able to attest from personal experience. His method is that known as "A. W. Brinkerhoff's System of Treating Rectal Diseases." Our city will be likely soon to lose him as a resident, as his talents as a specialist will call him to a more extended field of usefulness. He is now traveling over the State, and opening temporary offices in the various prominent cities and towns, where the sufferers from hemorrhoids extensively patronize him, and find the relief for which they long have prayed. The best evidence of his work is the array of heavy testimonials he has from the most reliable people of every section it has been his lot, is the dispensation of Providence, to labor for the alleviation of humanity's physical sufferings."

Evans—Lewis.

At seven o'clock of Wednesday morning, at the residence of the bride's father, William B. Lewis, Esq., at the corner of Eighth street and Madison avenue, the marriage of Miss Eliza Lewis and ex-Mayor John H. Evans was privately consummated. The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Evans left this city immediately for a month's tour to Cleveland, Baltimore and elsewhere.

Leaves.

They are falling thick and very fast every hour of the twenty-four, although there have been no frosts, which are supposed to give them a good start. Almost every evening fires blaze in various parts of the city, and the youngsters have their own fun in gathering them from door yards, gutters and streets, and applying the match. Some of the trees present already a magnificent appearance, and have the beautiful tints and colors which have been seen in previous seasons. In a few days more a handsome picture will be presented.

Capt. Gill Presented With a Sword.

A few days since some Elizabeth friends of Capt. Gill presented him with a costly complete regular army officer's outfit, including a very handsome sword. The donors proceeded to the Captain's spacious residence in the Schuylkill arsenal grounds, Philadelphia, where they were joined by intimate friends of the Captain from New York, Ohio and Washington, and the presentation and acceptance took place with most happy speeches on both sides. Later in the evening the guests were invited to partake of a feast fit for kings, prepared with the Captain's well-known liberality. The intellectual part following the feast is one long to be remembered by the participants, and the guests left the following evening after being shown the attractions of Philadelphia, with the bands of friendship between themselves and the genial, whole-souled Captain more firmly cemented.—Elizabeth Journal.

A Seasonable Publication.

The Fall number of Ehrich's Fashion Quarterly will be found particularly useful to all ladies who contemplate that most delightful of feminine occupation—shopping. Within the compass of its one hundred and twenty pages, it contains a compendium of the whole art and mystery of retail purchasing, giving a description of the latest styles in every department, with a complete list of prices, and really bewildering array of illustrations. Aided by this useful publication, a lady can plan out her shopping for the season, with an absolute certainty that no necessary item will be overlooked, and that every dollar will be made to do its full and utmost duty. Whether she makes her purchases by mail or from storekeepers nearer home, the Fashion Quarterly is equal useful. In either case it shows her just what styles are fashionable as well as which are economical, and studying its pages, a lady can adapt her expenditure to her means, and avoid the vexation of finding, too late, that unwitting extravagance in one direction entails inconvenient economy in another.

The Fashion Quarterly is published by Ehrich Bros., Eighth Avenue, New York, at 50 cents a year, or 15 cents a copy. It is amply worth its price.

Harmony in the Hospital.

In our issue of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST of Aug. 25th, there was read by the public the account of a disagreement that had previously arisen between members of the surgical and medical staffs of the Muhlenburg Hospital and its Surgeon-in-chief. The resignations of Drs. Field, Long, Tomlinson, Probasco, Boone and Endicott were thereupon sent in to the Board of Directors to take effect Aug. 15th unless certain rights that the resigning surgeons and physicians thought justly due them, were granted. As many members of the Board were at that season of the year absent from the city, it was requested that a final answer to the propositions be awaited until the matter could be considered by that body entire. This was assented to by the doctors, who to all intents and purposes again resumed their duties and withheld their resignations until now. At a recent meeting of the Board of Managers a most equitable spirit was apparent and a desire to promote harmony was shown. The disaffected surgeons and physicians were then requested to place before the Board in writing just what they desired, and that was done. On Tuesday evening last the Board met again and by its action undoubtedly did what the majority thought most reasonable and best calculated to insure peace and concord. It is probable that the office of Surgeon-in-chief will be abolished, that the resignations will be withdrawn and that in future no one doctor will be clothed with authority to dictate to another.

Instructions for Watchers at the Election.

The following suggestions have been prepared for the use of Democratic watchers of New York city on election day and night. They will apply in all localities:

Be present in the room occupied by the election inspectors fifteen minutes before the opening of the polls, and at least one of the watchers must be in constant attendance until the polls close.

Examine the ballot box before the polls open and satisfy yourself as to its structure and see that it is empty.

Be in a position where every ballot received can be seen and its deposit in the ballot box observed.

Challenge every voter whose right to vote is questionable.

Make a memorandum of every ballot sworn in and the reason for the challenge.

Do not permit the ballot box, or any ballot not in the box, to be removed from your constant sight until the votes are counted and the returns signed.

At the count, examine every ballot concerning which there is any question, and make a memorandum of its defects.

Ask one of the Republican inspectors to give you, in his own writing, the figures of the result, and carefully preserve such memorandum.

Get from the canvasser of your election district the Democratic canvass list, check off each Democratic vote as cast, and at 1 o'clock make a list of all Democrats who have not voted, and have them sent for.

See that every Democratic vote on the canvass list is cast early in the day.

Send to the Chairman of your County Committee, on the day following the election, a copy of the memoranda called for above.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Thursday the first entertainment of the course was given in the M. E. church, by Camilla Urso. The next entertainment will be given by Fitzhugh on Thanksgiving night.

On Monday evening the young men's Prayer and Song meeting will be held in the rooms. Let this meeting be well attended. The singing will be a special feature of the meeting. Topic for the evening "Honoring Parents" in the Lord. Eph. 6, 1-3.

On Thursday evening, Nov 9th, will occur the Annual election of officers of the Association for the ensuing year. Every member of the Association (not of the Board alone) but of the whole Association, active, associate, honorary and otherwise, is requested to be present and ballot for the officers. It is hoped that every member who sees this notice will consider it, and inform every other member whom he may meet.

On Saturday evening a Conversational Bible class will be conducted by the Secretary in the parlors of the Association. All young men are cordially invited to attend. The subject to be studied is the Life and Travels of Paul.

The out-post meetings are well attended and a good work is being done at each. These and a Sunday school are being held under the auspices of the Association.

THE LADIES AUXILIARY RECEPTION.

On Tuesday evening the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, gave the first of the monthly receptions, which are to be continued during the winter and spring months. Had the committee in charge had more time the programme would have been longer than the one rendered. But to say the least, the whole reception was a success. The programme was very finely given, and was loudly applauded. Miss Fannie Ketcham rendered two piano selections which were highly appreciated and showed her to be a skillful performer. Miss Lewis' recitations were nicely rendered and she both incited her audience to tears and convulsed them with laughter. The Secretary of the Association made a few remarks and then announced that refreshments would be served. Every young man present seemed much pleased and thought that such a reception by the ladies was what was wanted to bring young men to the rooms. It was strictly informal and the young men present were made to feel that there were some who took an interest in them, and that nothing would prevent them from coming again. Much praise is due to the ladies for their assistance in making these receptions a success. The next one will be held on Tuesday evening, Nov. 28th. Let every young man that can, be present on that night.

All Hallow Eve.

The festival of All Hallow Eve, around which so many superstitious notions cluster, was observed during Tuesday night by the young folks, with the usual carnival of fun. Ducking for apples, snap dragon and snap apples are games that have delighted generations, and have not as yet lost their amusement for those now in their teens.

The Mission Band Entertainment.

Miss Phelps, of Philadelphia, will play the piano at the entertainment for the benefit of the Plainfield Mission Band, to be given Friday evening, Nov. 17th. Her brilliant performance at the concert in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church about four years ago is very pleasantly remembered by all who were present. Miss Orum, the elocutionist, will participate in the programme.

Election Tuesday, Nov. 7th, 1882. Polls open from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m.

After a month's hard labor the bridge near the Fer Mill has been put in good repair. Carriages can now pass without danger.

The Excelsior H. & L. Co. No. 1. have obtained a plot of ground and will proceed at once to erect a Public Hall with a handsome Lodge Room on the upper floor. Cooking stove down the cellar.

Good Will Lodge, No. 101, K. of P., had quite an interesting and lively meeting Friday evening. The principal business of the convention being the working of the third or Rank of Knight. The attendance was quite large. Among those who favored the brethren with their presence and words of kindness were Bro's Ketchen, Moorhouse and Philpitt. The Senior past Chancellor stated that at the present time the number of members in good standing in the Lodge, to be forty-seven. He also explained the infinite amount of good which has been derived from the Endowment Rank. In his remarks, he stated that the present condition of this rank will compare most favorably with any and all other mutual benevolent associations existing. 589 sections have been instituted and the number of certificates in force in the three classes, Aug. 1st, 1882, was 26,761. The blessings bestowed by this rank upon the widows and orphans of our order, is beyond the power of man to estimate, but all can judge of its ability to relieve them when the fact is made known that $1,319,750 00 has been expended for that purpose since the organization of the Rank, on the 1st day of Jan. 1878. For the very small amount of twelve dollars a year every member of the order could secure for his family one thousand dollars that would be paid to them within sixty days after his death.

Fanwood's Agitation.

MESSRS EDITORS;

Please publish the following from the Central Times of to-day:

"The notice for election in Fanwood township contains a clause calling for a vote on an appropriation of $2,250 for a town hall. Most taxpayers open wide their eyes when they see this, as it was not generally supposed that the township was suffering to such an extent for the want of a town hall, just at this time, that there should be such haste to appropriate $2 250 out of the taxes, in addition to the extra heavy county and road tax to be imposed next year, on account of the late flood. The little joker reveals himself, however, when it is known that this project is sprung upon the the taxpayers without any previous notice, public meeting or even a formal vote of the town committee, for the simple purpose of heading off the Excelsior Hook and Ladder Co., who are perfecting arrangements to erect a building for their own use, with accommodations for township committee meetings, elections and other public purposes at a reasonable rental.

"As this is not a township election, the appropriation can not be printed on the regular ticket, but the ballot goes into a separate box. And so it needs only to have a majority of the votes actually in that box to carry it. Hence if there should be only 25 votes in the box, and 13 favored it, the taxpayers would be bound to pay out $2 250, whether they liked it or not.

If the matter was placed squarely before the people at the regular town meeting in March, it would be necessary to have a majority of the whole township vote, a difficulty which is avoided by the originator of this little plan.

Taxpayers should vote, squarely on this measure, either for or against, and not allow it to go by default."

Also the following in addition;

VOTERS OF FANWOOD TOWNSHIP.

The Excelsior Hook & Ladder Co. simply ask that you allow it until the township election in March, to complete its arrangements already considerably advanced toward erecting a building for public purposes, and if in that time it does not demonstrate its ability to build, it guarantees its support to any measure the taxpayers, at a public meeting, may propose.

Mr. F. B. Thurber, the grocer millionaire of New York, and Benjamin F. Butler, a demagogue millionaire of Boston, are two rampant anti-monopoly leaders. They never said anything against monopolies until they got all the money they wanted, and then they thought the cry would be popular.

It is stated as a positive fact in the departments that Senator Cameron has required making out of complete lists of Pennsylvania voters charged to the State holding positions in Washington, has had every man of them personally notified that he must go home and support the grand old party or lose his place. A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

WHAT IT DID FOR AN OLD LADY.—Coshocton Station, N. Y., Dec. 28, '78. Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case a lady over seventy years had been sick for years, and for ten years had not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbors, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use. W. B. HATHAWAY, Agent United States Express Co.

DELAVAN, Wis., Sept. 24, '78. Gents—I have taken quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 30. I see a great many that need such a medicine. D. BOYCE.

A GENTLEMAN from Orwell, Pa., called my attention to Elys' Cream Balm as a remedy for Catarrh, Hay Fever, &c. Don't be a Clam!

You shouldn't pattern after a Clam. They open their shells, take their food, but the moment anything new appears, they shut up, and will have nothing to do with it. Now, what's the use of being a CLAM? You are suffering with Malaria, or Chills and Fever, "Titsworth's Sure Cure for Malaria," may be to you a new idea—within the hard shells of prejudice you say—"I know that nothing seems to help me, I've almost made a Quinine mine of myself, without avail—still ill—shake!"

Of course you will, If you will be a Clam! Now, don't be a Clam! Give us a chance to prove to you that "Titsworth's Sure Cure" will positively cure you of Malaria! 40 drops will arrest the disease in 12 hours. Day is no more certain to follow night, than a complete cure is to follow the taking of this Remedy. Don't be a Clam!

Protecting the Fish.

Application will be made to the next Legislature at its next session for the enactment of a law prohibiting the fishing in any of the waters of this State with any net or seine, the meshes of which is less than one and a quarter inches square. Many seines and nets are now being used the meshes of which are not three-fourths of an inch square and even less, and as a consequence millions of small fish are taken by the fishermen, and in most cases are thrown aside and left to perish on the shore or probably carted off as manure, and in this manner are wasted as a food supply. Nets with large meshes would take only the fish large enough for table use, while the smaller ones would escape without injury.—Iron Era.

Locomotive Whistles and Signals.

Thirty members of the association of American Railroad Superintendents attended their annual meeting at No. 46, Bond street, New York, Wednesday. The following officers were elected: President, P. S. O'Rourke; Vice President, E. T. D. Myers; Secretary, W. Stone; Assistant Secretary, D. W. Sanborn; Treasurer, R. M. Sully. The following code of engineers' signals by whistle was adopted: One short blast of the whistle is a signal to apply the brakes to stop; two long blasts is to throw off brakes; two short blasts when running is in answer to signal of conductor to stop at next station; three blasts when standing means that the train will back. In addition to the above there were a few unimportant changes in the old code.

TRUE AND STEADFAST.

BY JUDGE CLARK.

When George Carson was left a destitute and friendless orphan, the town overseers took his case in hand and "bound him out" to farmer Pendrew. The farmer was a thrifty but not unkindly man, and every body said that the boy, in falling into such hands, had every reason to be thankful—which, indeed was but the truth.

Still, poor George felt very lonesome and unhappy at first. For, while his new home, in every comfort and surrounding, far exceeding that in which his life had hitherto been passed, yet everything was strange and new; and, at times, he felt a relief to slip off and have a good cry by myself. It was on one of these occasions that little Ruth, the farmer's daughter, stole quietly to his side, and, before he was conscious of her presence, took him gently by the hand.

"Don't cry," she said softly, as the boy turned his weeping eyes whilst the tears glistened in her own; "I know you have no papa nor mamma, but I'll be your sister if you'll let me."

It was the first healing touch the wounded heart had felt. George choked back a rising sob and thanked his little comforter, telling her, as well as he could, how very much he would like to have her for a sister.

Then Ruth showed him about the place. The feeling of strangeness gradually wore off, and George began to feel at home.

From that time, in his unemployed moments, he and Ruth were much together, for children naturally seek each other's company, and farmer Pendrew and his wife were not the people to look down on a boy merely because he was poor and without friends.

It was not long till it came George's turn to offer consolation. Ruth's mother died, and in the first outburst of her wild passionate grief, the child's heart seemed at the point of breaking. But when George came to tell her how very sorry for her he felt, she threw her arms about his neck and cried:

"Oh! George! George! neither of us have any mother now!"—and from this bond of sympathy the suffering, childish heart drew its first drop of comfort.

A fine, manly fellow George had grown by the time he reached his twenty-first year. He had well improved the three months' schooling every winter to which his "indentures" entitled him, and with that and the reading he was able to do of evenings, there were few better informed young men than George Carson.

As Ruth grew up into a beautiful and charming woman, she and George continued as close friends as ever, though naturally there was something more of reserve between them. They still looked upon each other as brother and sister—at least they thought they did. As for George he would have blamed himself severely had he detected in his mind any secret aspirations in connection with his master's daughter inconsistent with the difference of their stations.

"George," said Mr. Pendrew one day, "your time will soon be up now, but if you should like to remain on wages—"

"I should like it of all things," broke in George, without waiting for the other to finish.

"You see," resumed the farmer, "I don't like to be left quite alone in my old days. There's Ruth, she's going to be married soon—leastways Richard Harne has asked me for her, and I think she likes him well enough; and, to tell the truth, it's a match I've thought of more than once myself, for Dick's an only son, and his father's land joins mine. Now you've been so long like one of the family, George, that I'd like when Ruth's gone—But, bless me, boy, what's the matter?"

And well might the farmer ask, for the young man's face was deathly pale and his whole frame trembled.

Mastering himself by a powerful effort, George managed to regain his composure, and to change the conversation before Mr. Pendrew had time to suspect—what he had himself now first discovered—that it was not a brother's love he felt for Ruth.

At length the day came when George Carson was "his own man." He had some time before thanked farmer Pendrew for his offer to continue him on wages, which, however, he declined, declaring it to be his purpose to go and seek his fortune in the distant West. And on the very morning his time was out, with the fifty dollars which the farmer paid him according to the "articles," he started on his travels, after an earnest but a hasty farewell to the farmer and his daughter. There was a downcast, sorrowful look in Ruth's face and a tear trembled in her eyes as they parted, but George thought it was only because they had so long been brother and sister to each other.

Nearly seven years passed, and after many ups and downs George Carson found his way to the mining country. Here fortune took a turn. She fairly rained down her favors, and in an incredibly short space George was a rich man.

"If it had only happened years ago!" he sighed—"but to what purpose is it now?" he added moodily—remembering bitterly a rumor which had reached him long ago of Ruth's marriage to Richard Harne.

After awhile a strange longing came over George to visit the old scenes which were constantly rising before his fancy.

"Surely nobody would recognise me now," he said, "with his bushy beard and burly form. I might even steal a glance at Ruth without her knowing it."

And acting promptly on the thought, as was his habit, he was soon rapidly retracing the journey on which he had entered more than seven years before.

It was getting night when, after many weary days of travel, the train set him down at a little station six miles from farmer Pendrew's house. But George wasn't afraid of a good walk. So he resolved to go on at once, for somehow his impatience to see his old friends increased as the distance shortened. Besides he was sure of a hospitable reception, for farmer Pendrew's door was always open to a stranger. He would pretend to be a traveller stopping for a few days' rest, and in that way he might see Ruth and assure himself that her life was as happy as he had always prayed it might be.

As he briskly walked along, busied with these thoughts, a man sprang suddenly out of some bushes at the wayside.

From a glimpse of his face which George caught by the moonlight, he recognized the features of Richard Harne. But the next instant a heavy blow of a bludgeon stretched him senseless on the ground.

If the assailant's purpose was robbery, he had no time to accomplish it, for the sound of approaching steps compelled him to instant flight.

When George Carson returned to consciousness, he found himself in bed, and a sweet, gentle face bending over him. At the first glance he started with an exclamation of surprise. The face was Ruth's.

It disappeared quickly, and that of the doctor took its place.

"Tell her to come back!" appealed George, piteously.

"Calm yourself, my dear sir," urged the doctor; "you've had a sharp battle for life these three days past and it's hardly won yet."

"But I must see her," George pleaded.

"And you shall, but not till you are in a fit condition," returned the other; and administering a few drops of an opiate to his patient, the latter soon dropped asleep.

When he awoke the first thought was of Ruth.

"She must never know her husband's crime," he said to himself; "it would quite break her heart."

"I think he may safely see her now," muttered the doctor, stepping out, and the next moment Ruth entered.

"You don't know how glad I am to see you better, George," she said, taking his hand in the old sisterly way.

"So you know me, then?"

"I knew you at the first glance," she answered.

"Mrs.—Mrs. Harne—" he began.

Her face flushed deeply.

"Why do you call me by that name?" she asked.

"Why, are you not Richard Harne's wife?—I'm sure I heard so."

"What you heard was false, then. I am still Ruth Pendrew as you left me so many long, long years ago."

"Thank God?" George ejaculated.

Not then, but when he was strong enough to listen to it all, George heard from Ruth of her rejection of Richard Harne's offer, also of her father's death, and how she was now mistress of the old home, where she was living with a maiden aunt, and whither George had been carried by those who found him where he had been stricken down; and how Richard Harne had squandered all his patrimony and become an outcast, and many other things not needful now to mention.

George Carson's recovery was speedy and complete; and it was not long till he and Ruth entered into a closer relationship than that of brother and sister.

Richard Harne was never heard of afterward.—Ledger.

WORKING UP AN OBITUARY TO NO PURPOSE.

"Want an obituary?"

A rather short man, whose natural cheerful face wore a look of studied grief that was in strange contrast to the ruddy glow of his cheeks, stood in the doorway and propounded this interrogatory in a cheery tone of voice.

"Has another old citizen passed away?" inquired the horse reporter. "I never knew one of them to die," he continued, "but every little while a passing away occurs."

"The deceased," said the man in the doorway, "was certainly an old resident, and I may say that for purity of—"

"Oh, I know what you are going to say," interrupted the horse reporter. "You were about to remark that, 'for purity of purpose, strict fidelity to the principles that ever guide the man of honor and probity in dealing with his fellow men, our friend whose loss we mourn stood pre-eminent among his business associates.' Isn't that it?"

"That is certainly the tenor of what I had in mind, but there other things to be said about the deceased. He was an aff—"

"You bet he was," said the horse reporter. "I know all about that too. 'He was an affectionate husband, a kind parent, and nowhere will his loss be more keenly felt than within that hallowed spot where human love is ever strongest, human sorrow ever the most poignant—the sacred precinct of the domestic circle.' Ain't that it?"

"Well, I certainly did intend to say something like that," replied the short man, "but that wasn't all. In the hum—"

"That's right," again interrupted the friend of Maud S. "'In the humbler walks of life, where Poverty boldly stalks, where Crime is found and where Disease marks with its gaunt finger countless victims whose lives would otherwise be bright and joyous, our friend who is now no more was often to be found, giving freely of the means with which a kind providence had endowed him to alleviate the suffering of those whom misfortune had ever held within its iron grip.' Doesn't that about cover what you were going to tell me?"

"Yes," said the short man, "that's something like; but on second thought I guess I won't print this obituary. The deceased was only a New Jersey man, anyhow, and they say he never more than half provided for his family, and went to the lodge about five nights in the week. Some said he removed to this State from the penitentiary, but I don't know anything about that. He's dead, anyhow, and dead men can't do anybody much good, can they?"

"Not a great deal," replied the horse reporter.

"Well, so long," said the short man.

A WOMAN'S PRAYER.

"Lord, we thank thee that we are not as other women are, but that our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and that we have a goodly heritage; and, whereas, the Son of Man had not where to lay his head, we have changed all that, and have snug, cosy nests even at thine altars. Oh! Lord of Hosts! give us this day our daily Vienna, or French, or Boston brown bread, and turtle soup, and roast beef, and canvass-back ducks, and quail on toast; and please, Lord, do not forget calves' brains, and desserts galore, and all the delicacies of the seasons; and, Lord, re-reward us for eating them, according to the plenteousness of our deserts. We beg Thee most heartily to increase our fold a hundred thousand, and particularly a million fold. Let the cedars of Lebanon, the box tree, the fir tree, and the pine tree beautify the place of our habitation, and let our apparel be of purple and fine linen. This we beg for our own sakes, and ours shall be the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever, amen."

Never blows: The man with a wax nose may not be excessively modest, but he knows that destruction will follow the blowing of his own horn.

◆

The symptoms: Julia Ward Howe says women do not fall in love anymore. Perhaps, not, but they continue to have all the symptoms.

◆

Not enough: There are some men in politics who ought to be set to work to revise the Decalogue. They would have a great many more than ten commandments when they get through.

THE BAD BOY IN LOVE.

"How's things over to your house?" inquired the groceryman of the bad boy. "And say, what's the matter with you. You are all dressed up, and have got a clean shirt on, and your shoes blacked, and I notice your pants are not raveled out so at the bottoms of the legs behind. You are not in love are you?"

"Well, I should smile," said the boy, as he looked in a small mirror on the counter, covered with the fly specks. "A girl got mashed on me, and ma says it is good for a boy who hasn't got no sister to be in love with a girl, and so I kind of tumbled to myself, and she don't go nowhere without I go with her. I take her to dancing school, and everywhere, and she loves me like a house a fire. Say, was you ever in love? Makes a fellow feel queer, don't it? Well, sir, the first time I went home with her I put my arm around her, and honest it scared me. It was just like when you take hold of the handles of 'lectric battery, and you can't let go till the man turns the knob. Honest, I was just as weak as a cat. I thought she had needles in her belt, and was going to take my arm away, but it was just like it was glued on. I asked her if she felt that way too, and she said she used to, but it was nothing when you got used to it. That made me mad. But she is older than me, and knows more about it. When I was going to leave her at the gate, she kissed me, and that was worse than putting my arm around her. By gosh, I trembled all over just like I had the chills, but I was as warm as toast. She wouldn't let go for much as a minute, and I was tired as though I had been carrying coal up stairs. I didn't want to go home at all, but she said it would be the best way for me to go home, and come again the next day; and the next morning I went to her house before any of them were up, and her pa came out to let the cat in, and I asked what time his girl got up, and he laffed and said I had got it bad, and that I better go home and not be picked till I got ripe. Say, how much does it cost to get married?"

"Well, I should say you had got it bad," said the grocery man, as he set out a basket of beets. "Your getting in love will be a great thing for your pa though. You won't have time to play any more jokes on him."

"Oh, I guess we can find time to keep pa from being lonesome. Have you seen him this morning? You ought to have seen him last night. You see, my chum's pa has got a setter dog stuffed. It is one that died two years ago, and he thought a great deal of it, and he had it stuffed, for a ornament. Well, my chum and me took the dog and put it on our front steps, and took some cotton and fastened it to the dog's mouth so it looked just like froth, and we got behind the door and waited for pa to come home from the theatre. When pa started to come up the steps I growled, and pa looked at the dog and said, 'Mad dog, by crimus!' and he started down the sidewalk, and my chum barked just like a dog, and I ki-yi-d and growled like a dog that gets licked and you ought to see pa run. He went around in the alley, and was going to get in the basement window, and my chum had a revolver with some blank cartridges, and we went down in the basement, and when pa was trying to open the window my chum began firing towards pa. Pa hollered that it was only him, and not a burglar, but after my chum fired four shots pa run and climbed over the fence, and then we took the dog home, and I stayed with my chum all night, and this morning ma said pa didn't get home till four o'clock, and then a policeman came with him, and pa talked about mad dogs and being taken for a burglar and nearly killed, and she said she was afraid pa had took to drinking again, and she asked me if I heard any firing of guns, and I said no, and then she put a wet towel on pa's head."

"You ought to be ashamed," said the grocery man. "How does your pa like being in love with the girl? Does he seem to encourage you in it?"

"Oh, yes. She was up to our house to borry some tea, and pa patted her on the cheek and hugged her, and said she was a dear little daisy, and wanted her to sit in his lap, but when I wanted him to let me have fifty cents to buy her some ice cream he said that was all nonsense. He said: 'Look at your ma. Eating ice cream when she was a girl was what injured her health for life.' I asked ma about it, and she said pa never laid out a ten cents for ice cream or any other luxury for in all the five years he was sparking her. She says he took her to a circus once, but he got free tickets for carrying water for the elephant. She says pa was tighter than the bark to a tree. I tell you it's to be different with me. If there is anything that girl wants she is going to have it if I have to sell ma's copper boiler to get the money. What is the use of having wealth if you hoard it up and don't enjoy it? This family will be run on different principles after this, you bet. Say, how much are those yellow wooden pocket combs in the show case? I've a good notion to buy them for her. How would one of them round mirrors with a zinc cover do for a present for a girl. There is nothing too good for her."—Peck's Sun.

HOW HE SAVED THE TRAIN.

The usual crowd of Autumn liars were gathered together in the store, occupying all the grocery seats—the only gross receipts that the proprietor took no pride in—when a little, blear-eyed, weasen-faced individual "sneaked" in by the back door and slunk into a dark corner.

"That's him," said the ungramatical bummer with a green patch over his left eye.

"Who is it?" asked several at once.

"Why, the chap who saved a train from being wrecked," was the reply.

"Come, tell us about it," they demanded, as the small man crouched in the darkness, as if unwilling that his heroic deed should be brought out under the glare of the blazing kerosene lamp.

After much persuasion, reinforced by a stiff horn of applejack, he began:

"It was just such a night as this—bright and clear—and I was going home down the track, when, right before me, across the rails, lay a great beam. There it was. Pale and ghastly as a lifeless body, and, light as it appeared, I had not the power to move it. A sudden rumble and roar told me that the night express was thundering down, and soon would reach the fatal spot. Nearer and nearer it approached, till, just as the cowcatcher was about to lift me, I sprang aside, placed myself between the obstruction and the track, and the train flew on unharmed."

The silence was so dense for a moment that one might have heard a dew drop. Presently somebody said:

"What did you do with the beam?"

"I didn't touch it," he replied; "but it touched me."

"Well," persisted the questioner, "if you couldn't lift it, and didn't touch it, how in thunder did the train get over it?"

"Why don't you see?" said the sad-faced man, as he rose from his seat and sidled toward the door. "The obstruction was a moon-beam, and I jumped so that the shadow of my body took its place, and—"

Bang! flew a ham against the door; and if it had struck the body of the retreating hero, there would have been a much bigger grease spot frescoed on the panel of the door.—Drake's Trav. Magazine.

FROM "TALES FOR TODDLERS."

Charles was a little boy who loved his Mother dearly, and whenever she told him anything he was very careful to Obey.

One day in the spring when the birds were singing and the buds on the apple trees were almost ready to burst into beautiful white blossoms, Charles asked his Mother for Ten Cents to buy Marbles, for the ground was getting dry and the other boys were beginning to enjoy their favorite Sport. "You can have the money, my son," said the Mother, "but you must promise me not to play for Keeps, and every night that you can come home and tell me truthfully that you have not disobeyed your Mamma I will give you a Large Red Apple." And then she kissed him Fondly, and he went gayly away to School.

But before Charles had gone very far he met Thomas Tough, who was a Bad Boy. Charles told Thomas about the Ten Cents that his Mother had given him to buy Marbles with, and also told him that he could not play for Keeps unless he was willing to go without the Red Apple.

When Thomas heard this he said, "Give me the marbles that you are going to buy and I will play with them for Keeps, and after School is out we will Divide what I have won, for I am a Superior Player. Then you can truthfully tell your Mother that you have not been playing for Keeps, and will receive the Red Apple."

So Charles gave his Marbles to Thomas, and after School was out asked him how many Marbles he had Won.

"I did not Win," replied Thomas. "I struck a hard crowd and lost."

Then Charles was sad, for he was a pretty Tight-Fisted little boy, and began to Cry. But presently he said to Thomas: "You are a naughty boy, and I hate you very Much."

And the Thomas hit Charles in the Nose and threw him down in the Dirt, making his new panties look very bad indeed.

So when Charles reach home he told his Papa all about his troubles. When he had finished his Papa said to him: "You don't know as much as Thompson's Colt, and I'm going to take a Crack at you myself."

Then he gave Charles a good Licking and sent him to bed without any Supper. And when Charles had lain on his Stomach for a while, because he felt more Comfortable that way, he said to himself: "No more Blind-Pools for me."

Do you not think he had a Great Head, children? I do.

GLORY.

"Hang banners on the outer wall—
The cry is still they come."

From North, South, East and West is heard the shout of victorious Democrats. Tramp, tramp, tramp, they are coming tens of thousands multiplied by tens.

The political revolution is widespread and overwhelming. The people have risen in their might, and when they are up and determined, down must go arrogant bosses, brazen-faced corruptionists, venal traders, plotters and frauds of every name and grade.

It is time for the people to act.

Time to decree a change.

It has been done.

Hark!

Don't you hear the thunder roar?

Look!

See you not the lightning strike?

New York, the Empire State elects a Democratic Governor by over 180,000 majority, and sustains him with a Legislature Democratic in both branches.

Pennsylvania, the Keystone, elects a Democratic Governor and State Officers to the tune of 30,000.

Massachusetts, the old Bay State, yes Massachusetts, falls into the Democratic line and makes General Butler her Chief Magistrate by a large majority.

California, the Golden, and Connecticut, the Steady, follow suit with Democratic Governors and rousing Democratic majorities.

Gains of Democratic Congressmen throughout the length and breadth of the land guarantee Democratic control of the next House of Representatives, without an imbecile Keifer in the chair and a mercenary Robeson on the floor.

Glory!

A Democratic majority on joint ballot in the Legislature of New Jersey secures a Democratic United States Senator.

Glory! Glory!

Glory enough for one day!

DEMOCRACY.

It seems strange to some people that while other parties have fallen to pieces the Democratic has maintained organization intact, and never failed to lift high its banners in each returning election contest.

We say such is a singular fact to some people, but to all who are familiar with the political history of our country the reason is plainly discernible.

The Democratic party was founded to defend and perpetuate the very principles of free government which the Constitution of the United States embodies. It has never swerved therefrom, and to-day it proclaims that to be the goal of its ambition.

To rigidly obey the Constitution from A to Z, to advance the general public welfare, and resolutely protect the rights and privileges of every citizen, is the true object and aim of Democracy.

That is why the Democratic party cannot be destroyed, and why defamation and temporary defeat only nerves it to fight with more determined energy.

It is based upon principles of civil and religious liberty, and so long as those priceless blessings exist, the party of Democracy, or of the people, will live and boldly battle.

Where is the austere and aristocratic Federal party? Where the expediency courting National Republican, the bigoted Know Nothing, and the exclusive Whig parties, each of whom in turn vigorously strove to kill off the Democratic? Dead and buried, and the present Republican is rapidly hastening to a like doom.

Truth and justice are eternal.

Democracy will never die.

Democrats! you bear an honorable designation, your political history is national fame, your cause is Liberty and the People, fearlessly sustain it!

WESTFIELD WISPS.

A convention of the congregational association was held on Wednesday afternoon and evening in the new church edifice of the society in our town.

Miss M. E. Johnson has bought out the millinery business of the late Mrs. M. L. Trimmer, and has opened with a good selection of millinery goods.

The friends of Samuel Godshalk who went to the eye infirmary at Philadelphia last week to be doctored for an abscess on the eye, are glad to learn he is gradually improving.

The flag has not been hoisted on one of our public buildings since the Maine election in September last. Why not raise it once in honor of the great Democratic victories of the present week and show no partiality?

Wm. H. Day reported on Wednesday evening that he had been shot at in the railroad park near the depot by an unknown person, who seemed to be crazy. Quite a number of persons turned out to look for the desperado but failed in finding him. It may be one of Bill's ghost stories.

On Monday evening last the annual meeting of the Westfield Thief Detective Society was held. Dr. Wm. Gale was elected President; Levi Cory, Vice President; James M. French, Secretary, and John S. Irving, Treasurer, and a board of directors consisting of seven members. This society is in a flourishing condition and ready when called upon to do active service in pursuit of thieves.

On Sunday evening last a Union Temperance meeting was held in the Presbyterian church. The services were opened with prayer by the Rev. Warren Hoagland of the M. E. church, Scripture reading by the pastor, the Rev. N. W. Cadwell and an address by the Rev. E. H. Bronson of the Baptist church, which seemed by a great number of his hearers to be more of a political lecture than a temperance one.

On Monday last the death occurred of Lucy S. Downer, widow of the late Dr. Edwin Downer, deceased, of our town. The funeral took place on Wednesday, the 8th inst. from the residence of John T. Lawrence, Esq., on Mountain avenue, at 10:30 a. m. The burial services were performed by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member. The remains were taken on the 1:37 p. m. train to New York and from thence to Greenwood cemetery for burial in the family plot.

The election on Tuesday last shows the Republican majority of our town to be 56 on the vote for Coroner, which was a few more than the Democrats were willing to concede, while Cranstoun, the Republican candidate for county clerk, received 45 majority and Parrot, Republican candidate for Surrogate, only received 28 majority, after especial efforts in his interest had been made by a prominent Republican of our town. The election passed off very quietly. 412 votes was the total number polled.

The anniversary of the M. E. Sunday School was held on Sunday afternoon last at 2:30 o'clock. The exercises were held in the main audience room of the church which was filled to overflowing. The organ was presided over by Miss Ella Ferris, with Chas. H. Day, cornet accompaniment. The exercises began with an organ voluntary, prayer by the pastor, Rev. Warren Hoagland, Scripture reading by Prof. Wm. H. Elston, singing by the school and a brief report from the officers. A very able address was made by John Davidson of Elizabeth, N. J., and also one by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell of the Presbyterian church from the text—"And forbid them not."

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 6th, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

The undersigned on the 4th day of May, 1880, made a proposition to introduce water into the city of Plainfield for domestic and sanitary purposes and for the protection of property against destruction by fire.

The proposition was made at a time when the price of material and the cost of general construction was some thirty (30) per cent. less than the same can be procured for to-day.

Your petitioners were property holders, old residents and tax payers, who have seen and contributed toward the growth of the comparatively unknown township of Plainfield with its 2,500 inhabitants and its [illegible] valuation of taxable property to the present unprecedented increase in population, with a taxable valuation of not much less than [illegible] of dollars.

Having fully satisfied ourselves that the introduction of water into the city was an absolute necessity, in order to [illegible] of capital in household investments, [illegible] the increase of valuations, and the decrease of taxation, and being familiar with the restrictions of the powers of the city, under its charter and amendments thereto, rendering it impossible for our city to undertake a work of the kind and bear its burden therefore, we were willing to take the chances under the provisions of the application made to your honorable body to introduce water, and that the city might have the privilege of becoming the owners thereof, at any time after the expiration of a term of years when it should have grown and felt competent to accept the obligation itself.

The object of your petitioners was simply to take upon themselves the experiment of a corporation by which in the opening of books, any citizen might become a subscriber and contributor towards this enterprise, who might desire so to do and in making this communication, they are still of the opinion that the introduction of water would enhance the value of the present taxable property to a very large extent and draw investments towards our city, which would largely increase the industry and values, and render the taxable burdens far less than at present.

But having been misunderstood and misrepresented by the factious, indiscreet and unintelligible articles appearing in the press, and having no object of our own to serve, nor being so citizens interested in the Common welfare, and inasmuch as no definite action has been taken upon our proposition, and as the prices have advanced for material and otherwise, necessary to construct the works, we now hereby withdraw our proposition; and in doing so, we would thank the members of the Council who have had the foresight to urge its acceptance.

We shall, trying to serve the interests of our good city, hold ourselves in readiness to do our part in the future, towards bringing about this desirable object.

Very Respectfully,

JOHN W. MURRAY,
JACOB KIRKNER,
JOHN W. YATES,
GEORGE H. BABCOCK,
J. FRANK HUBBARD,

On motion accepted, received and filed, and original propositions returned.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM CITY OFFICERS.

The President presented a communication from the Mayor as follows:

Plainfield, October 30, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN: After careful consideration I am compelled to withhold my signature from warrant No. [illegible], ordered drawn by your honorable body against a claim for $90.16, which claim was last year decided by the Circuit Court to be invalid. Touching the grounds of invalidity, as found by the court, whether because barred by the statute of limitation or otherwise, I feel that with them I have (whilst acting in a fiduciary capacity) nothing to do. [illegible] might be made on both sides of the case as to the equities involved. The fact that the claim was purchased by a merchant for whatever valuable consideration, does not add to its validity. I am informed that it was understood that the services here charged for were to be paid for out of assessments when collected, and that the assessments themselves proved invalid. Whether under these circumstances the claim for services will equitable may fairly be regarded as an open question; but when, for reasons best known to themselves, the claimants failed to press their claim for so long a period of years as that it was at last judicially set aside by the court as no legal debt or obligation of the city whatever, I do not feel that we have the right as public servants to make a gift of this or any other sum out of the city treasury. This remark will apply to another claim now before your honorable body, as also to still others which I understand are likely to be presented. It will apply, I think at all times, and certainly not least at a moment when we have exhausted our borrowing power at the bank; have some thousands of dollars of unpaid bills of the present year to provide; have serious need of street repairs; and when the Council have found it necessary on the ground of economy to order out street lights for the later months of their term.

The question of paying claims definitely disallowed by the courts is now, I think, presented for the first time, and we should be wary of erring in the precedent established. Unless we have an appeal go take from the decision of the court, it is as that to be governed by it. Should the views herein presented meet with the approval of your honorable body, there would appear to be no impediment to your ordering the warrant canceled.

Very Respectfully,

L. V. F. RANDOLPH, Mayor.

Mr. Ginna thought the Council had thoroughly considered all the points made by the Mayor before ordering the payment of the claim, and moved for adoption a resolution referring the communication to the Corporation Counsel for his opinion as to legal right of the Mayor to refuse to sign warrants ordered drawn by the Council.

Carried, all aye.

The President presented the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov 1st, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield, N. J.

GENTLEMEN:—In accordance with "An ordinance to establish the office of City Physician and prescribe his duties," I hereby present my report for the quarter ending Oct 31st, 1882.

I have issued fourteen (14) permits for the burial of bodies brought into the city for interment, and forty-seven (47) for the burial of persons dying within the city and North Plainfield. I have received for the above permits the sum of eighteen and 75-100 Dollars. Appended is a tabulation, compiled from the permit stubs, showing actual mortality of the city for the quarter, together with the causes of death of each decedent. Phthisis Pulmonalis, 8; Pneumonia, 1; Cholera Infantum, 11; Marasmus, 6; Dysentery, 1; Old Age, 3, Still Born 2, Anemia, 1, Cancer, 1; Paralysis of Heart, 3; Convulsions, 1; Typhoid Fever, 1; Articular Rheumatism, 1; Abdominal Abscess, 1; Biliary Calculi 1.

Very Respectfully Submitted,

R. S. LOWRIE,
City Physician.

Received and ordered filed.

Mr. Newhall presented a communication from the Corporation Counsel, with lists of cases pending for or against the city.

Read and placed on file.

From the same an opinion as to the legality of the County's claim on the first moneys received of each year's taxes until the full County quota be paid. The opinion was to the effect that the City Treasurer was required to satisfy the County's claim out of the first moneys received by him from whatever source of tax—the school and school bond taxes being exempted.

Read and placed on file.

Mr. Depew presented the report of the City Finances for the month of October. Received and filed.

Also the report of City Collector for the month of October. Referred to Finance Com., so much as concerned taxes prior to 1882 received.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

By Mr. Ginna, from Special Committee, a report as to the Board of Education's demand for certain moneys.

Received, placed on file and Clerk instructed to notify Board of Education as to the result of investigation.

Alms, Laws, Police, Streets, and Lamps Committees reported as correct sundry claims in their hands. Ref'd to Aud. Com.

Mr. J. Simpson, from Aud. Com., reported as correct the claims of W. L. Force & Bro., $72.60; G. W. Moore, 201.47; G. W. Moore, 184.37; J. M. Buck, 282; C. W. Dodd, 58.34; G. W. Grant, 43.17; R. Randolph, 41.67; P. Lynch, 2.75; Plainfield Gaslight Co., 244.40; J. C. Meeker, 261.19.

Warrants ordered drawn.

Also bill of N. Y. & N. J. Globe Co., $137.60. Laid on table. Mr. Livingston from License Com., reported as approved the petition of Edw. Buck. Same granted.

Mr. Ginna presented for adoption an ordinance for the amendment of the liquor license ordinance.

Read by the Clerk its first and second time and ordered published preparatory to its third reading.

Mr. Ginna moved that ex-Corporation Counsel Kimball be retained at an expense not to exceed $25 to conduct the case of Day vs the city on appeal.

Messrs Livingston and Thompson stated they had understood when the salary of the Corporation Counsel was raised, that he volunteered to pay out of such increase any extra expense for conducting of cases in which the city was interested.

The motion was lost. Messrs Gardner, Livingston, Rushmore, J. Simpson, R. Simpson, and Thompson voting in the negative.

Mr. Depew offered a resolution providing for renewal of note falling due. Adopted.

Mr. Ginna offered a resolution instructing the clerk to advertise polling places of coming charter election. Adopted.

Mr. Thompson offered a resolution requesting of the City Judge a statement of the fines collected by him. Adopted.

Mr. Ginna offered a resolution providing for the relighting of all street lamps, commencing Dec. 1st. Carried. Messrs. Ginna, Newhall, Rushmore, J. Simpson and R. Simpson voting aye.

Mr. Ginna moved that a vote of thanks be tendered Chas. Opdycke, Esq., for his gratuitous repairs of the damages to the street near his residence, by the late flood.

Amended by Mr. Thompson to include ex-Mayor Evans and Mayor Randolph.

On motion of Mr. Livingston, laid on the table.

The Council then adjourned.

The Result!

The vote in Plainfield during Tuesday last, as will be seen by the total vote given elsewhere, was unusually large but there was little excitement. The flattering majority given Mr. Vosseller by his friends of both parties was unprecedented—exceeding the full vote given his opponent—and was a compliment deserved by reason of his ability, integrity and fitness for the office he now occupies and will retain for another five years. Surrogate Gerber, by reason of the blackguard attacks made against his nativity and religion, and in consequence of [illegible] of those working for his defeat, ran about 200 votes ahead of his ticket and the majority of 439 for Kean was cut down to 116 against Mr. Gerber. "Miles" was undoubtedly left in Plainfield by the act of many Democrats who were dissatisfied with his course in certain matters, and his defeat in the County is due to the same cause, added to the influence of Kean's money and his free rum. The lesson taught and the rebuke given to strikers in the party who bolted the regular Democratic nominees for spite or a consideration, was so manifest and severe as to be lasting and beneficial. The traitors will be remembered, and neither their (?) own nor the opposite party will henceforth have place or use for them.

* indicates majorities. Two votes for the National ticket were cast in Somerville.

[It is probable that Howey has 200 maj. in Hunterdon county, while Harris has 100 majority in Sussex, with Warren county to hear from.]

Throughout the Country.

In New York State Grover Cleveland is elected Governor by a majority which, according to the returns received, will probably not fall short of 190,000. His majority in New York city alone is about 78,000. In Brooklyn he has a majority of 38,000. The remainder of the Democratic State ticket is elected by majorities about equal to Cleveland's.

Franklin Edson is elected Mayor of New York city by about 25,000 majority, and the remainder of the Democratic local ticket is elected by majorities ranging from 12,000 to 20,000.

The whole Democratic local ticket in Brooklyn is elected.

Gen. Tracy, the Republican candidate for Supreme Court Judge in the Second Judicial District is defeated by Judge Brown, the Democratic candidate.

The Democrats have gained at least two Congressmen in New York, and the indications are that they will have an increased majority in the Assembly, assuring a just re-apportionment of the State.

In New York city Nicholas Muller, D., S. S. Cox, D., William Dorsheimer, D., John Hardy, D., and Abram S. Hewitt, D., are elected to Congress.—John J. Adams, D., and W. L. Strong, R., are probably elected.

Bessor Robeson is defeated for Congress in the First New Jersey District, by a majority estimated at 1,500. His own county gave several hundred majority against him.

Miles Ross, for Congress in the Third New Jersey District, is defeated, as is Henry S. Harris, in the Fourth District.

The Democratic gains of Assemblymen in New Jersey insure a Democratic majority of six on joint ballot in the Legislature.

General Butler is elected Governor of Massachusetts by a majority of about 20,000. The Democrats gain three or four Congressmen in Massachusetts.

The returns from Pennsylvania come in slowly, but late estimates give Pattison, the Democratic candidate for Governor, a plurality of 30,000 over Beaver.

Waller, the little Democratic Giant of Connecticut, is elected Governor by a majority estimated at from 2,000 to 3,000. The Democrats gain two Congressmen in Connecticut, electing three out of the four to which the State is entitled.

In Wisconsin the Democrats gain three Congressmen.

In California the Democrats have a majority on the general ticket estimated at from 3,000 to 5,000.

In Texas the whole Democratic ticket is elected by an overwhelming majority.

The Democrats are victorious in Georgia, Missouri and Louisiana, and gain a Congressman in Iowa.

Late returns indicate the election of the Democratic State ticket in Indiana, by about 8,000 majority.

The coalitionists claim the election of Wise for Congressman-at-Large in Virginia by 20,000 majority, but late returns gave Democratic gains, and the Democrats were hopeful of Massey's election.

The Republican candidate for Governor in Kansas is defeated. Six Republican Congressmen are claimed and one is doubtful.

Colorado elects a Democratic Governor by probably 3,000 majority.—Democrats claim everything.

Nevada Democrats claim the Governor and Congressman by 2,000 majority.

Michigan elects a Greenback Governor—supported by Democrats. The remainder of the State ticket and the Legislature are Republican. Democrats claim 6 of the 11 Congressmen.

The Missouri Congressman are all Democrats, except possibly one in the Ninth District.

Miss Helen M. Phelps.

This distinguished pianiste of Philadelphia will be assisted by Miss Julia A. Orum, Elocutionist, Mrs. W. U. Mayer, Soprano, and Mr. Theo. W. Trewendt at the entertainment to be given for the benefit of the Mission Band on Friday evening, Nov. 17th, 8 p. m., in the chapel of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church. The programme will consist of choice but popular selections.

One Year Ago.

General matters of interest—as now—were drowned in the whirlpool of politics - - - - - the bursting of a lamp in the store of Randolph & Son, started a fire that was, however, promptly extinguished - - - - Messrs. Frey and King gave an exhibition of pool playing in this city - - - - - The Ladies' Land League of Plainfield gave its Second Annual Sociable at Laing's Hall; and the Turn Verein gave a Ball at Blatz's.

Personalia.

Ex-Mayor H. J. Taylor of Jersey City, father-in-law of Councilman Robert Livingston, has been visiting his daughter at the latter's residence for some weeks past.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Lowe, of Park avenue, celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding by a large reception at their residence during Tuesday evening. A very brilliant gathering of invited guests were entertained.

Mr. C. P. Chamberlin, the former proprietor of Laing's Hotel, is spending the coming few weeks at the residence of his son-in-law in North Plainfield. Mr. Chamberlin, after a very successful Summer season, has closed his house at Cheshire, Conn., for the winter.

The Opening Entertainment.

The first of the Y. M. C. A., Course for the present season, was given at the M. E. Church on Thursday evening of last week and attended by a large audience. Although the demands on our columns this week are very great, we must in justice testify to the general excellence of the programme and the varied abilities of those who took part. Mme Urso's talent as a violinist was proven to be phenomenal, and her performance established her right to rank above all others that have appeared in this city. Of the vocalists Miss Hall was probably the most pleasing, although Miss Spader gave general satisfaction. Mr. Liebling's efforts as a pianist were favorably received, and Mr. Burbank—while displaying no remarkable powers as an elocutionist—amused the assemblage. As a whole the opening entertainment could hardly have been bettered—except, possibly, by more Urso and less Burbank.

J. H. STEVENS, the horse-shoer, announces the removal of his place of business from Somerset street to Second street, near Peace. See adv.

The finest tradesman knows how to make a customer happy. All that is necessary is to charge him twenty per cent. more than the market price, and whisper in his ear, "but I'll let you have it for ten per cent. off."

THE 3:32 train from Philadelphia to New York yesterday morning, brought to this city Wm. Eustace of Westfield, who was found lying between the two main tracks west of Plainfield. He was taken to the City Jail and attended by Dr. J. T. Fritts who found the victim too much under the influence of liquor to give any account of himself. It is supposed he fell off a train and struck on his head. The man was subsequently taken to his home in Westfield by his brother.

EPHRAIM DRAKE, a former resident of this city and now living back of Dunellen, went into his pasture last Monday afternoon to separate a cow and calf that were fighting. The calf in making a plunge at its adversary ran against Mr. Drake with such force as to knock him down, where he lay insensible until found by members of his family and carried to his house. At first fears were entertained that the unfortunate man, who is very corpulent, had received internal injuries, but at present he seems rapidly recovering.

THANKS to the efforts of the Rev. Father O'Hanlon, Mrs. Eugene Gross, Mrs. Paulina Echeverria and other ladies, the Fair that for the past four days and nights has been held in Van Deventer Hall, was one of the most successful. Its object in aiding the erection of St. Joseph's R. C. church of North Plainfield, called for the patronage of a large class of the people and great financial profit is assured. We shall not be able until our next issue to announce the fortunate winners of the different gifts voted to the most popular business men and fire department members.

A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

WHAT IT DID FOR AN OLD LADY.—Coshocton Station, N. Y., Dec. 28, '78. Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case a lady over seventy years had been sick for years, and for ten years had not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbors, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use. W. B. HATHAWAY, Agent United States Express Co.

DELAVAN, Wis., Sept. 24, '78. Gents—I have taken quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 30. I see a great many that need such a medicine. D. BOYCE.

WHAT WOMEN SHOULD USE.—Dyspepsia, weak back, despondency and other troubles caused me [illegible] suffering, but Parker's Ginger Tonic makes me feel like a new being. A great remedy. Every woman should use it. Mrs. Gaitz, Pittsburg.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE,
EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

GLORY.

"Hang banners on the outer wall—
The cry is still they come."

From North, South, East and West is heard the shout of victorious Democrats. Tramp, tramp, tramp, they are coming tens of thousands multiplied by tens.

The political revolution is widespread and overwhelming. The people have risen in their might, and when they are up and determined, down must go arrogant bosses, brazen-faced corruptionists, venal traders, plotters and frauds of every name and grade.

It is time for the people to act.

Time to decree a change.

It has been done.

Hark!

Don't you hear the thunder roar?

Look!

See you not the lightning strike?

New York, the Empire State elects a Democratic Governor by over 180,000 majority, and sustains him with a Legislature Democratic in both branches.

Pennsylvania, the Keystone, elects a Democratic Governor and State Officers to the tune of 30,000.

Massachusetts, the old Bay State, yes Massachusetts, falls into the Democratic line and makes General Butler her Chief Magistrate by a large majority.

California, the Golden, and Connecticut, the Steady, follow suit with Democratic Governors and rousing Democratic majorities.

Gains of Democratic Congressmen throughout the length and breadth of the land guarantee Democratic control of the next House of Representatives, without an imbecile Keifer in the chair and a mercenary Robeson on the floor.

Glory!

A Democratic majority on joint ballot in the Legislature of New Jersey secures a Democratic United States Senator.

Glory! Glory!

Glory enough for one day!

DEMOCRACY.

It seems strange to some people that while other parties have fallen to pieces the Democratic has maintained organization intact, and never failed to lift high its banners in each returning election contest.

We say such is a singular fact to some people, but to all who are familiar with the political history of our country the reason is plainly discernible.

The Democratic party was founded to defend and perpetuate the very principles of free government which the Constitution of the United States embodies. It has never swerved therefrom, and to-day it proclaims that to be the goal of its ambition.

To rigidly obey the Constitution from A to Z, to advance the general public welfare, and resolutely protect the rights and privileges of every citizen, is the true object and aim of Democracy.

That is why the Democratic party cannot be destroyed, and why defamation and temporary defeat only nerves it to fight with more determined energy.

It is based upon principles of civil and religious liberty, and so long as those priceless blessings exist, the party of Democracy, or of the people, will live and boldly battle.

Where is the austere and Aristocratic Federal party? Where the expediency courting National Republican, the bigoted Know Nothing, and the exclusive Whig parties, each of whom in turn vigorously strove to kill off the Democratic? Dead and buried, and the present Republican is rapidly hastening to a like doom.

Truth and justice are eternal.

Democracy will never die.

Democrats! you bear an honorable designation, your political history is national fame, your cause is Liberty and the People, fearlessly sustain it!

WESTFIELD WISPS.

J. E. Bartis of Scotch Plains has rented the hotel stables and stocked them with horses and carriages as a livery stable.

A convention of the congregational association was held on Wednesday afternoon and evening in the new church edifice of the society in our town.

Albert W. Moffett removed from our town last week to his new hotel in Clark township, which he opened as a roadhouse on Tuesday evening last.

Miss M. E. Johnson has bought out the millinery business of the late Mrs. M. L. Trimmer, and has opened with a good selection of millinery goods.

The friends of Samuel Godshalk, who went to the eye infirmary at Philadelphia last week to be doctored for an abcess on the eye, are glad to learn he is gradually improving.

The flag has not been hoisted on one of our public buildings since the Maine election in September last. Why not raise it once in honor of the great Democratic victories of the present week and show no partiality?

Wm. H. Day reported on Wednesday evening that he had been shot at in the railroad park near the depot by an unknown person, who seemed to be crazy. Quite a number of persons turned out to look for the desperado but failed in finding him. It may be one of Bill's ghost stories.

On Monday evening last the annual meeting of the Westfield Thief-Detective Society was held. Dr. Wm. Gale was elected President; Levi Cory, Vice President; James M. French, Secretary, and John S. Irving, Treasurer, and a board of directors, consisting of seven members. This society is in a flourishing condition and ready when called upon to do active service in pursuit of thieves.

On Sunday evening last a Union Temperance meeting was held in the Presbyterian church. The services were opened with prayer by the Rev. Warren Hoagland of the M. E. church, Scripture reading by the pastor, the Rev. N. W. Cadwell and an address by the Rev. E. H. Bronson of the Baptist church, which seemed by a great number of his hearers to be more of a political lecture than a temperance one.

On Monday last the death occurred of Lucy S. Downer, widow of the late Dr. Edwin Downer, deceased, of our town. The funeral took place on Wednesday, the 8th inst. from the residence of John T. Lawrence, Esq., on Mountain avenue, at 10:30 a. m. The burial services were performed by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member. The remains were taken on the 1:37 p. m. train to New York and from thence to Greenwood cemetery for burial in the family plot.

The election on Tuesday last shows the Republican majority of our town to be 56 on the vote for Coroner, which was a few more than the Democrats were willing to concede, while Cranstoun, the Republican candidate for county clerk, received 45 majority and Parrot, Republican candidate for Surrogate, only received 29 majority, after especial efforts in his interest had been made by a prominent Republican of our town. The election passed off very quietly. 412 votes was the total number polled.

The anniversary of the M. E. Sunday School was held on Sunday afternoon last at 2:30 o'clock. The exercises were held in the main audience room of the church which was filled to overflowing. The organ was presided over by Miss Ella Ferris, with Chas. H. Day, cornet accompaniment. The exercises began with an organ voluntary, prayer by the pastor, Rev. Warren Hoagland, Scripture reading by Prof. Wm. H. Elston, singing by the school and a brief report from the officers. A very able address was made by John Davidson of Elizabeth, N. J., and also one by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell of the Presbyterian church from the text—"And forbid them not."

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 6th, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

The undersigned on the 8th day of May, 1882, made a proposition to introduce water into the city of Plainfield for domestic and sanitary purposes and for the protection of property against destruction by fire.

The proposition was made at a time when the price of material and the cost of general construction was about thirty (30) per cent. less than the same can be procured for to-day.

Your petitioners were property holders, and real estate and tax payers, who have been and contributed toward the growth of the comparatively unknown township of Plainfield with its 2,500 inhabitants and its $300,000 valuation of taxable property to its present unprecedented increase in population, with a taxable valuation of not much less than 4 millions of dollars.

Having fully satisfied ourselves that the introduction of water into the city was an absolute necessity, in order to draw an increase of capital in [illegible], tending towards the increase of valuations, and the decrease of taxation, and being familiar with the restrictions of the powers of the city, under its charter and amendments thereto rendering it impossible for our city to undertake a work of the kind and [illegible], we were willing to take the chances under the provisions of the application made to your honorable body to introduce water, and that the city might have the privilege of becoming the owners thereof, at any time after the expiration of a term of years when it should have grown and felt competent to accept the obligation itself.

The object of your petitioners was simply to take upon themselves the [illegible] of a corporation by which in the opening of books, any citizen might become a subscriber and contribute towards this enterprise, who might desire so to do and in making this communication, they are still of the opinion that the introduction of water would enhance the value of the present taxable property to a very large extent and draw investments towards our city, which would largely increase the industry and values, and render the taxable burdens far less than at present.

But having been misunderstood and misrepresented by the factious, indiscreet and [illegible] articles appearing in the press, and having no object of our own to serve, except as citizens interested in the common welfare, and inasmuch as no definite action has been taken upon our proposition, and as the prices have advanced for material and otherwise, necessary to construct the works, we now hereby withdraw our proposition, and in doing so, we would thank the members of the Council who have had the foresight to urge its acceptance.

We shall, trying to serve the interests of our good city, hold ourselves in readiness to do our part in the future, towards bringing about this desirable object.

Very Respectfully,

JOHN W. MURRAY,
JACOB KIRNER,
JOSEPH W. YATES,
GEORGE H. BABCOCK,
J. FRANK HUBBARD,
EDWARD L. FINCH,
JAMES CLARK.

On motion accepted, received and filed, and original propositions returned.

All the above referred to the proper Committee.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM CITY OFFICERS.

The President presented a communication from the Mayor as follows:

Plainfield, October 30, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN: After careful consideration I am compelled to withhold my signature from warrant No. 2081, ordered drawn by your honorable body against a claim for $90.14, which claim was last year decided by the Circuit Court to be invalid. Touching the grounds of invalidity, as found by the court, whether because barred by the statute of limitation or otherwise, I feel that with them I have (whilst acting in a fiduciary capacity) nothing to do. Doubtless arguments might be made on both sides of the case as to the equities involved. The fact that the claim was purchased by a merchant, for whatever valuable consideration, does not add to its validity. I am informed that it was understood that the services here charged for were to be paid for out of assessments when collected, and that the assessments themselves proved invalid. Whether under these circumstances the claim for services was equitable may fairly be regarded as an open question; but when, for reasons best known to themselves, the claimants failed to press their claim for so long a period of years as that it was at last distinctly set aside by the court as no legal debt or obligation of the city whatever, I do not feel that we have the right as public servants to make a gift of this or any other sum out of the city treasury. This remark will apply to another claim now before your honorable body, as also to still others which I understand are likely to be presented. It will apply, I think at all times, and certainly [illegible] at a moment when we have exhausted our borrowing power in the bank; have some thousands of dollars of unpaid bills of the present year in prospect; have serious need of street repairs; and when the Council have found it necessary on the ground of economy to order the street lights for the latter months of their term.

The question of paying claims definitely disallowed by the courts is now, I think, presented for the first time, and we should be wary of erring in the precedent established. Unless we have an appeal to take from the decision of the court, it is equal to be governed by it. Should the views herein presented meet with the approval of your honorable body, there would appear to be no impediment to your ordering the warrant canceled.

Very Respectfully,

[illegible], Mayor.

Mr. Ginna thought the Council had thoroughly considered all the points made by the Mayor before ordering the payment of the claim, and moved for adoption a resolution referring the communication to the Corporation Counsel for his opinion as to legal right of the Mayor to refuse to sign warrants ordered drawn by the Council.

Carried, all aye.

The President presented the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov 1st, 1882.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield, N. J.:

GENTLEMEN:—In accordance with "An ordinance to establish the office of City Physician and prescribe his duties," I hereby present my report for the quarter ending Oct 31st, 1882.

I have issued fourteen (14) permits for the burial of bodies brought into the city for interment, and forty-seven (47) for the burial of persons dying within the city and North Plainfield. I have received for the above permits the sum of eighty-one and 75-100 dollars. Appended is a tabulation compiled from the permit books, showing actual mortality of the city for the quarter, together with the cause of death of each decedent. Phthisis Pulmonalis, 8; Pneumonia, 1; Cholera Infantum, 11; Marasmus, 6; Dysentery, 1; Old Age, 3; Still Born 2, Anemia, 1, Cancer, 1; Paralysis of Heart, 4; Convulsions, 1; Typhoid Fever, 1; Articular Rheumatism, 1; Abdominal Abcess, 1; Biliary Calculi 1.

Very Respectfully Submitted,
H. H. LOWRIE,
City Physician.

Received and ordered filed.

Mr. Newhall presented a communication from the Corporation Counsel, with lists of cases pending for or against the city.

Read and placed on file.

From the same an opinion as to the legality of the County's claim on the first moneys received of each year's taxes until the full County quota be paid. The opinion was to the effect that the City Treasurer was required to satisfy the County's claim out of the first moneys received by him from whatever source of tax—the school and school bond taxes being exempted.

Read and placed on file.

Mr. Depew presented the report of the City Finances for the month of October. Received and filed.

Also the report of City Collector for the month of October. Referred to Finance Com., so much as concerned taxes prior to 1882 received.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

By Mr. Ginna, from Special Committee, a report as to the Board of Education's demand for certain moneys.

Received, placed on file and Clerk instructed to notify Board of Education as to the result of investigation.

Alms, Laws, Police, Streets, and Lamps Committees reported as correct sundry claims in their hands. Ref'd to Aud. Com.

Mr. J. Simpson, from Aud. Com., reported as correct the claims of W. L. Force & Bro., $72.60; G. W. Moore, 201 47; G. W. Moore, 184.37; J. M. Buck, 282; C. W. Dodd, 58.34; G. W. Grant, 43.17; R. Randolph, 41.67; P. Lynch, 2.75; Plainfield Gaslight Co., 244.40; J. C. Meeker, 261.19.

Warrants ordered drawn.

Also bill of N. Y. & N. J. Globe Co., $127.60. Laid on table. Mr. Livingston from License Com., reported as approved the petition of Edw. Beck. Same granted.

Mr. Ginna presented for adoption an ordinance for the amendment of the liquor license ordinance.

Read by the Clerk its first and second time and ordered published preparatory to its third reading.

Mr. Ginna moved that ex-Corporation Counsel Kimball be retained at an expense not to exceed $25 to conduct the case of Day vs the city on appeal.

Messrs. Livingston and Thompson stated they had understood when the salary of the Corporation Counsel was raised, that he volunteered to pay out of such increase any extra expense for conducting of cases in which the city was interested.

The motion was lost. Messrs Gardner, Livingston, Rushmore, J. Simpson, R. Simpson, and Thompson voting in the negative.

Mr. Depew offered a resolution providing for renewal of note falling due. Adopted.

Mr. Ginna offered a resolution instructing the clerk to advertise polling places of coming charter election. Adopted.

Mr. Thompson offered a resolution requesting of the City Judge a statement of the fines collected by him. Adopted.

Mr. Ginna offered a resolution providing for the relighting of all street lamps, commencing Dec. 1st. Carried. Messrs. Ginna, Newhall, Rushmore, J. Simpson and R. Simpson voting aye.

Mr. Ginna moved that a vote of thanks be tendered Chas. Opdycke, Esq., for his gratuitous repairs of the damages to the street near his residence, by the late flood.

Amended by Mr. Thompson to include ex-Mayor Evans and Mayor Randolph.

On motion of Mr. Livingston, laid on the table.

The Council then adjourned.

The Result!

The vote in Plainfield during Tuesday last, as will be seen by the total vote given elsewhere, was unusually large but there was little excitement. The flattering majority given Mr. Vosseller by his friends of both parties was unprecedented—exceeding the full vote given his opponent—and was a compliment deserved by reason of his ability, integrity and fitness for the office he now occupies and will retain for another five years. Surrogate Gerber, by reason of the blackguard attacks made against his nativity and religion, and in consequence of [illegible] of influence of those working for his defeat, ran about 200 votes ahead of his ticket and the majority of 439 for Kean was cut down to 116 against Mr. Gerber. "Miles" was undoubtedly left in Plainfield by the act of many Democrats who were dissatisfied with his course in certain matters, and his defeat in the County is due to the same cause, added to the influence of Kean's money and his free rum. The lesson taught and the rebuke given to strikers in the party who bolted the regular Democratic nominees for spite or a consideration, was so manifest and severe as to be lasting and beneficial. The traitors will be remembered, and neither their (?) own nor the opposite party will henceforth have place or use for them.

* indicates majorities. Two votes for the National ticket were cast in Somerville.

[It is probable that Howey has 800 maj. in Hunterdon county, while Harris has 100 majority in Sussex, with Warren county to hear from.]

Throughout the Country.

In New York State Grover Cleveland is elected Governor by a majority which, according to the returns received, will probably not fall short of 190,000. His majority in New York city alone is about 78,000. In Brooklyn he has a majority of 38,000. The remainder of the Democratic State ticket is elected by majorities about equal to Cleveland's.

Franklin Edson is elected Mayor of New York city by about 25,000 majority, and the remainder of the Democratic local ticket is elected by majorities ranging from 12,000 to 20,000.

The whole Democratic local ticket in Brooklyn is elected.

Gen. Tracy, the Republican candidate for Supreme Court Judge in the Second Judicial District is defeated by Judge Brown, the Democratic candidate.

The Democrats have gained at least two Congressmen in New York, and the indications are that they will have an increased majority in the Assembly, assuring a just re-apportionment of the State.

In New York city Nicholas Muller, D., S. S. Cox, D., William Dorsheimer, D., John Hardy, D., and Abram S. Hewitt, D., are elected to Congress.—John J. Adams, D., and W. L. Strong, R., are probably elected.

Secor Robeson is defeated for Congress in the First New Jersey District, by a majority estimated at 1,500. His own county gave several hundred majority against him.

Miles Ross, for Congress in the Third New Jersey District, is defeated, as is Henry S. Harris, in the Fourth District.

The Democratic gains of Assemblymen in New Jersey insure a Democratic majority of six on joint ballot in the Legislature.

General Butler is elected Governor of Massachusetts by a majority of about 20,000. The Democrats gain three or four Congressmen in Massachusetts.

The returns from Pennsylvania come in slowly, but late estimates give Pattison, the Democratic candidate for Governor, a plurality of 30,000 over Beaver.

Waller, the little Democratic Giant of Connecticut, is elected Governor by a majority estimated at from 2,000 to 3,000. The Democrats gain two Congressmen in Connecticut, electing three out of the four to which the State is entitled.

In Wisconsin the Democrats gain three Congressmen.

In California the Democrats have a majority on the general ticket estimated at from 3,000 to 5,000.

In Texas the whole Democratic ticket is elected by an overwhelming majority.

The Democrats are victorious in Georgia, Missouri and Louisiana, and gain a Congressman in Iowa.

Late returns indicate the election of the Democratic State ticket in Indiana, by about 8,000 majority.

The coalitionists claim the election of Wise for Congressman-at-Large in Virginia by 20,000 majority, but late returns gave Democratic gains, and the Democrats were hopeful of Massey's election.

The Republican candidate for Governor in Kansas is defeated. Six Republican Congressmen are claimed and one is doubtful.

Colorado elects a Democratic Governor by probably 3,000 majority.—Democrats claim everything.

Nevada Democrats claim the Governor and Congressman by 2,000 majority.

Michigan elects a Greenback Governor—supported by Democrats. The remainder of the State ticket and the Legislature are Republican. Democrats claim 6 of the 11 Congressmen.

The Missouri Congressmen are all Democrats, except possibly one in the Ninth District.

Miss Helen M. Phelps.

This distinguished pianiste of Philadelphia will be assisted by Miss Julia A. Orum, Elocutionist, Mrs. W. U. Mayer, Soprano, and Mr. Theo. W. Trewendt at the entertainment to be given for the benefit of the Mission Band on Friday evening, Nov. 17th, 8 p. m., in the chapel of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church. The programme will consist of choice but popular selections.

One Year Ago.

General matters of interest—as now—were drowned in the whirlpool of politics - - - - the bursting of a lamp in the store of Randolph & Son, started a fire that was, however, promptly extinguished. - - - - Messrs. Frey and King gave an exhibition of pool playing in this city - - - - The Ladies' Land League of Plainfield gave its Second Annual Sociable at Laing's Hall; and the Turn Verein gave a Ball at Blatz's.

Personalia.

Ex-Mayor H. J. Taylor of Jersey City, father-in-law of Councilman Robert Livingston, has been visiting his daughter at the latter's residence for some weeks past.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Lowe, of Park avenue, celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding by a large reception at their residence during Tuesday evening. A very brilliant gathering of invited guests were entertained.

Mr. C. F. Chamberlin, the former proprietor of Laing's Hotel, is spending the coming few weeks at the residence of his son-in-law in North Plainfield. Mr. Chamberlin, after a very successful Summer season, has closed his house at Cheshire, Conn., for the winter.

The Opening Entertainment.

The first of the Y. M. C. A., Course for the present season, was given at the M. E. Church on Thursday evening of last week and attended by a large audience. Although the demands on our columns this week are very great, we must in justice testify to the general excellence of the programme and the varied abilities of those who took part. Mme Urso's talent as a violinist was proven to be phenomenal, and her performance established her right to rank above all others that have appeared in this city. Of the vocalists Miss Hall was probably the most pleasing, although Miss Spader gave general satisfaction. Mr. Liebling's efforts as a pianist were favorably received, and Mr. Burbank—while displaying no remarkable powers as an elocutionist—amused the assemblage. As a whole the opening entertainment could hardly have been bettered—except, possibly, by more Urso and less Burbank.

J. R. STEVENS, the horse-shoer, announces the removal of his place of business from Somerset street to Second street, near Peace. See adv.

The honest tradesman knows how to make a customer happy. All that is necessary is to charge him twenty per cent. more than the market price, and whisper in his ear, "but I'll let you have it for ten per cent. off."

THE 3:32 train from Philadelphia to New York yesterday morning, brought to this city Wm. Eustace of Westfield, who was found lying between the two main tracks west of Plainfield. He was taken to the City Jail and attended by Dr. J. T. Fritts who found the victim too much under the influence of liquor to give any account of himself. It is supposed he fell off a train and struck on his head. The man was subsequently taken to his home in Westfield by his brother.

EPHRAIM DRAKE, a former resident of this city and now living back of Dunellen, went into his pasture last Monday afternoon to separate a cow and calf that were fighting. The calf in making a plunge at its adversary ran against Mr. Drake with such force as to knock him down, where he lay insensible until found by members of his family and carried to the house. At first fears were entertained that the unfortunate man, who is very corpulent, had received internal injuries, but at present he seems rapidly recovering.

THANKS to the efforts of the Rev. Father O'Hanlon, Mrs. Eugene Gross, Mrs. Paulina Echeverria and other ladies, the Fair that for the past four days and nights has been held in Van Deventer Hall, was one of the most successful. Its object in aiding the erection of St. Joseph's R. C., church of North Plainfield, called for the patronage of a large class of the people and great financial profit is assured. We shall not be able until our next issue to announce the fortunate winners of the different gifts voted to the most popular business man and fire department members.

A LITTLE OF EVERYTHING.

WHAT IT DID FOR AN OLD LADY.—Coshocton Station, N. Y., Dec. 28, '78. Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case a lady over seventy years had been sick for years, and for ten years had not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbors, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use. W. B. HATHAWAY, Agent United States Express Co.

DELEVAN, Wis., Sept. 24, '78. Gents—I have taken quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 30. I see a great many that need such a medicine. D. BOYCE.

HOW TO AVOID DRUNKENNESS.—Forbid intoxicating nostrums and use Parker's Ginger Tonic in your family. This delicious remedy never intoxicates, is a true blood and brain food, and aiding all the vital functions never fails to invigorate.

WHAT WOMEN SHOULD USE.—Dyspepsia, weak back, despondency and other troubles caused me special suffering, but Parker's Ginger Tonic makes me feel like a new being. A great remedy. Every woman should use it. Mrs. Garlis, Pittsburg.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.

It seems strange that anyone will suffer from the many derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing Scrofula, Syphilitic disorders, Weakness of the Kidneys, Erysipelas, Malaria; all Nervous disorders and Debility, Bilious complaints and all Diseases indicating an impure condition of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Stomach, skin, etc. It corrects indigestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

ON THE EVE OF MATRIMONY.

[FROM THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE.]

"Do they edit in here?"

The several occupants of the room looked around and discovered a young lady standing in the doorway. She nodded slightly to the horse reporter, and that individual returned the salutation with a placid mile-and-a-half-over-eight-hurdles smile whose grandeur of expanse would alone have made it noticeable.

"You are right this time, madame," he said. "This is the exact spot where the seething brain of the trained journalist proceeds to bubble, and the lances of Thought that pierce with unerring aim the brazen helmets of Wrong are ever held in couchant poise by strong arms ready to launch them forth at the signal of danger.

"Papa doesn't know I am up here," said the vision of loveliness, "but mama does. The very minute I told her I was going to see an editor she said it was the best thing to do, but when I got right to the door I just thought I should die."

"You don't appear to be in danger of immediate dissolution," remarked the horse reporter.

"Oh, of course I don't exactly mean that," said the young lady, "but I was awfully nervous, you know—I always was that way—and when I was a little girl papa used to say that the only way to govern me was by kindness."

"Well, we'll be gentle with you," replied the personal friend of Barus. "Would you like to read the Hawkinsville Clarion, or the Cohoes Freeman?" pointing to a pile of exchanges.

"No, I don't care about it, thank you," was the reply. "You editors must have a hard time managing all the people who come up here.

"There is a managing editor for that purpose," said the horse reporter.

"How nice! And do all these gentlemen edit?"

"Yes."

I'm going to be married next week," said the young lady. "Ain't it funny?"

"Quite ludicrous, no doubt," was the reply.

"And I came up here," she continued, "to see if you would put a nice notice of the affair in the paper. Will you do it?"

"Certainly," said the horse reporter. "Would you have it referred to as 'another one of those delightful events in which the happiness of a trusting love finds glad fruition in wedded bliss,' or, 'the marriage bells rang out merrily last evening, telling to the star-lit skys a joyful tale of love's final triumph?' Both those sentences are kept in type, and you can have your choice."

"I rather like the last one," said the young lady. "It is more tenderly beautiful. Don't you think so?"

"Yes," replied the horse reporter, "there's a sort of curfew-will-not-ring-to-night tinge to it that lays over the other one."

"Well, then, I will take that. And will an editor be around to write it up?"

"Certainly."

"I will send you a piece of the wedding cake," continued the young lady.

"Do," said the horse reporter. "There's a dog up my way that needs killing."

THE COMET.

Sensational reports are again being spread that the great comet now blazing in the morning sky will return next year, fall into the sun, and by the collision increase the sun's heat to such a degree that all living things upon the earth may be destroyed. This is, of course, based upon the theory that the present comet is identical with the great comet of 1880, and that every time it approaches the sun it does so in a narrower orbit than before. In fact, however, the most careful observations of the comet go to show that it is not identical with the comet of 1880. The mathematicians who are now at work on the problem say it cannot return in less than eight or ten years. It may be identical with the comet of 1843, or it may be another body moving in the same path. There is no proof of any narrowing of its orbit, and the astronomers do not expect it to strike the sun. If it should fall into the sun its mass is comparatively so slight that it would produce no appreciable effect upon the earth.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From Committee on Linden Township Bridges.

RESOLUTIONS.

By the Director:

Whereas, In accordance with a long custom of our Board, we have made appropriations, or more properly estimates, of damage done by the recent freshet, and as the amount is large (though not anything like what was anticipated), it is natural that all taxpayers should take a deep interest in the subject, and require the "utmost economy in obtaining security and permanency," therefore, be it

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves each to the other and ourselves jointly to the people of the county to use the utmost economy in obtaining security and permanency," regardless of these appropriations or estimates in repairing damage done by said freshet, leaving undone all that is inconsistent in law or to our oath of office.

On motion, adopted.

JOHN L. CROWELL, Clerk.
Oct. 19th, 1882.

A young lady in one of our rural districts was escorted home from an evening party not long since by a young man to whom she was not particularly partial. On taking his leave he remarked, "I guess I'll come and see you agin next Sunday-night." "Well, Jim," replied the lady, "you can come as a friend, but not as a feller."

At a social club to which Jerrold belonged the subject turned one evening upon music. The discussion was animated, and a certain song was cited as an exquisite composition. "That song," exclaimed an enthusiastic member, "always carries me away when I hear it." Looking eagerly round the table, "Can anybody whistle it?" asked Jerrold.
